10 Thousand Set to March In Firemen's Parade Today

150 Fire Apparatus, 35 Bands and 80 Floats to Be in Show.

Cabinet Officers To View Festival

That joyous jumble of noise, color, pomp, music—the Firemen's Labor Day parade—moves off on its spectacular way up Pennsylvania avenue at 11 a. m., today.

Prospects are for the biggest crowd ever to attend. Hint of showers from the Weather Bureau was the only dubious note. The parade has been made possible through the cooperation of The Washington Post.

One hundred and fifty pieces of fire apparatus, 35 bands—including those of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps—10,000 gaily garbed marchers, soldiers, sailors, marines and coast guardsmen.

Bargagni Parade's Maestro.

These are some of the features for the eleventh successive year by Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, maestro of Labor Day parades and his diligent associates, working with Post representatives.

Eighty floats will form a flow of multicolored presentation.

Firemen from nine States—Indiana, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina—will march.

Old Tom to Be in Line.

Old Tom, valiant fire horse of a bygone day, will team with two other equines, to pull a pumper. In the past two years, Gene and Barney, Tom's buddies, have gone to the Valhalla of fire horses.

Near the front of the parade will be an open auto and riding therein will be Warren Dues, 23, of Flint, Mich., who saved the lives of seven children in a flame-swept dwelling.

Dues, out of a job, was awarded The Washington Post Medal yesterday as the greatest living fire hero. The award was bestowed by Brig. Gen. John A. Johnston in the Sylvan Theater.

Capital Notables in Lead.

Leading the parade also will be Chief of Police Ernest W. Brown, Fire Chief George S. Watson, Odell S. Smith, chairman of the citizens committe, and Sergt. Bargagni. Mildred, daughter of Sergt. Bargagni, will be official hostess.

Six members of the Cabinet and the District Commissioners will be among notables to occupy the reviewing stand across from The Post Building at Fourteenth street northwest and Pennsylvania avenue.

Cabinet officials to view the parade will be Secretary of War Dern, Sec-

Condition of Viscount Held Less Favorable

Christon Bank, England, Sept. 3 (AP).—Viscount Grey, of Fallodon, former British foreign secretary and Ambassador to the United States, who is gravely ill here, had a restless night.

Otherwise, a bulletin by physicians said, his condition remained unchanged. It was said authoritatively this bulletin was regarded as less favorable than any issued since he became weaker last Wednesday.

Richmond Flier Injured In Plane Dive at Rodeo

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 3 (AP).—Richard Davidson, Richmond pilot, was injured seriously today when his monoplane nose-dived from 100 feet during an aerial rodeo. The plane was almost demolished.

A crowd of 5,000 witnessed the events. Lieut. Comdr. Frank M. Hawks arrived early tonight. Dick Morgan, of Wilmington, Del., grand nephew of J. Pierpont Morgan, won first prize in stunting.

300,000 Attend Fair In Day, Setting Record

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—More than a quarter of a million persons passed through the turnstiles at the World's Fair today, establishing an exposition record.

D. C. Police and Fireman Also Given Awards at Rites for Fallen.

Warren Dues, 23-year-old former messenger boy, of Flint, Mich., had two big thrills yesterday.

One was when former District Commissioner John A. Johnston pinned The Washington Post medal, awarded to the greatest living hero of fires, on his lapel.

The other was when he had his first airplane ride—a spin in an Air Services, Inc., plane over Washington.

Dues, who looks like a mere boy, said he didn't get much of a thrill out of saving seven children from a flame-swept house. He didn't have time to think of thrills—or himself.

Dues' job was getting those seven kids out of the fire. One of them he had to rescue twice. A lass of 7 insisted on returning when Dues' back was turned to get her party shoes.

Dues was critically burned. When he got out of the hospital, apparently everybody had forgotten about his deed. He didn't even have a job.

A prominent fire official of Flint recommended Dues for the medal when he heard The Post was looking for a worthy recipient.

The medal was given to Dues yesterday at an impressive service in the Sylvan Theater for firemen killed in the line of duty.

The Marine Band provided music and a Marine bugler blew "Taps." Several widows and orphans of fireman heroes were present.

Three District policemen and a local fireman also received medals, awarded by Congress, for valorous deeds.

The policemen were Privates Arthur Poulsen, George A. Walrodt and Herman L. Lay. The fireman was Private Francis O'Donnell. Lay still is in Emergency Hospital, suffering from a bullet wound inflicted by a desperate prisoner. Capt. Edward Kelley accepted the medal for him.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, District police head, recited the deeds of the four District men as they received their medals and the crowds cheered.

Gangsters Rob Resort Guests

Men, Women Forced to Lie on Floor; Bandits Get $10,000.

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Five gunmen terrorized 190 guests at the Crystal Lodge roadhouse, at Crystal Lake, today, and escaped with money and valuables estimated at $10,000.

The robbers shot out the ceiling lights and herded guests, including 100 women, to the middle of the dance floor.

All were forced to lie face down. After looting the cash register the robbers went through pockets and purses of guests.

The search required nearly a half hour. As the holdup men left they cautioned the victims to remain where they were for 30 minutes.

Ecuador Duelists Miss Three Times; Quit as Friends

Quito, Ecuador, Sept. 3 (AP).—Col. Alberto Enriquez and Senator Adolfo Gomez Santistevan fought a duel today, but nobody was hurt.

Although both men are pistol experts, three exchanges of shots went wide of the mark. The combatants thereupon abandoned the duelling idea, embraced each other and left the field.

2 Balloon Race Pilots Downed

Other 4 Entries in Bennett International Contest Unreported.

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Two of the six balloons in the twenty-first annual James Gordon Bennett International Balloon Race were down tonight, apparently out of the race for honors. Definite reports regarding the others were lacking.

The French entry, piloted by Georges Ravaine and his aid, Georges Blanchet, descended in a field near Homer, Mich., at 4:07 p. m., E. S. T. Homer is about 150 miles by air from Chicago. "No wind," was the comment of Ravaine.

A low-pressure area, which expanded the gas and ripped the bag, brought down the Deutschland, German entry, about half a mile out of Kingston, Mich., 8:15, E. S. T., tonight.

The basket struck a ditch containing about a foot of water, but the two fliers, Dr. Erik Koerner and Richard Scheutz, were uninjured. The bag piled up on a fence.

One bag was reported by a steamer to have passed over the straits of Mackinac at 10 a. m. Coast Guards at Sturgeon Point on the Lake Huron coast about 150 miles north of Detroit spotted another balloon this afternoon, and later word came from Edmore, Mich., 50 miles northeast of Grand Rapids, that an unidentified contestant was seen there.

NRA Admitted Trial, Young Roosevelt Says

Mason City, Iowa, Sept. 3 (AP).—The national recovery program is admittedly an experiment and may be changed from time to time to fit new conditions, but it is sound in theory and practice and will be carried out with a vigor that never knows defeat, James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, told a crowd of 6,000 here today.

Young Roosevelt appealed for public support of his father's measures, especially addressing those into whose hands the enforcement of the various projects fall.

Ford to Snub Last Chance To Sign Code

(Copyright, 1933, by United Press.)

Marquette, Mich., Sept. 3 (U.P.).—Henry Ford plans to ignore his opportunity to sign the NRA code and to bring his gigantic plants under the Blue Eagle, it was learned from a reliable source tonight.

Midnight Tuesday is the deadline for him to sign the code.

Ford, it was learned, has no intention of leaving his Huron Mountain Club Camp until the end of the week and probably will let the Tuesday deadline pass unnoticed. It appeared probable he would keep his silence and make no explanation of his refusal to sign.

Earlier in the summer, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson revealed he talked with Ford at Dearborn, several days prior to the drawing up of the code and said he was then assured by Ford he would work with the Government. Since that time there has been no intimation of Ford's attitude.

Johnson's efforts to reach Ford during discussions on the auto code in Detroit got no farther than Ford's son Edsel. Ford was at the time suffering a slight attack of influenza which caused him to curtail plans to celebrate his 70th birthday.

Ford kept to his camp today. Saturday he drove twice to the nearest village, Bigbay, a straggling row of stores, churches and homes. On his first trip he telephoned his offices in Detroit.

De Valera Prepares To Counteract Foes

Dublin, Sept. 3 (U.P.).—To counteract the proposed fusion of all the opposition parties, President Eamon de Valera was reported today planning an alliance with the Irish Republican army and the Sinn Fein organization.

If the scheme were carried out, it was believed it would result in a plebiscite on the question of openly declaring an Irish Republic, including northern Ireland, now outside the Irish Free State headed by De Valera.

Thousands Brave Rain To See Trapped Deer

Watkins Glen, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP).—In spite of rain the streets of Watkins Glen were crowded with thousands of automobiles today, bringing visitors to Watkins Glen State Park where a deer has remained for eight days on a narrow ledge. Restaurants did rushing business.

The deer meanwhile continued to avoid the bridge thrown across a gorge to the ledge where it climbed to safety after tourists had frightened its companion to jump to death August 26.

Labor Peace To Be Sought By President

(Associated Press.)

Labor Day, long heralded as a milestone in the recovery drive, finds much of the country blanketed under the NRA's Blue Eagle in America's greatest peace time mobilization, but myriad problems of employer-employe relations casting their shadows ahead.

So vital has the labor question become in the recovery program that there are many indications President Roosevelt will take a hand in calming the troubled situation soon after his return.

With the highly important bituminous coal code still suspended upon and old ledge of union or nonunion controversy, the labor question thrusting its way into operation of virtually every major code, and strikes reported over the Nation, officials are in general accord that an early solution is essential.

Johnson in Chicago.

In Chicago, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson today will make what he considers one of his more significant addresses of the recovery campaign, giving an account of his stewardship over the move to restore industry. Donald R. Richberg, the general counsel, will speak at Ottumwa, Iowa, and in Memphis, Tenn., at night.

Miss Mary E. Hughes, chief of the women's division of the NRA, will take part in a Lexington (Ky.) rally and then continue on to Nashville, Birmingham and Atlanta before returning to Washington.

The full machinery for making effective the recovery drive has not been completed, but it is based primarily upon establishing surely that an evasion is being practiced and then, after removing the insignia, publicizing the reason for acting.

Returning tomorrow to the task of getting agreements between nonunion coal operators and the United Mine Workers of America, Gen. Johnson is hopeful that this can be accomplished within a few days, and after that a code, written by him, quickly agreed upon.

Also he expressed hope that a code covering all retailers, including grocers and druggists, would be adopted soon, as a result of weeks of conferences directed by A. D. Whiteside deputy administrator.

Collective Bargaining.

The interpretations to be placed upon the collective bargaining guarantee for labor in the recovery act is to have much of the administrator's attention, however, and Johnson said Saturday he was consider-

Attack on Four Children Denied

Prince Georges Officials Scout Lanham Bullet Barrage Report.

Prince Georges county police today denied reports that two men attempted to kill four children playing in woods near Lanham.

The alleged attempt occured Saturday.

Parents of the children were told that the four were playing in the woods near their home, when two men, armed with rifles, began firing at them. The frightened children ran for home, bullets singing near their heads.

Jews Seek U. S. Aid In Evictions of Nazi

Zionists Group Asks Help for Countrymen.

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Sept. 3 (U.P.).—The world Zionist Congress tonight approved a resolution proposing intervention of the United States to help settle problems growing out of the anti-Jewish policy of the Nazi regime in Germany.

The resolution was proposed by Morris Rothenberg, of New York, leader of one bloc of the United States delegation.

The resolution, heatedly debated, cited as precedent America's example in repatriating Greeks during trouble in Asia Minor. The scheme was to settle the Jews evicted from Germany in Palestine.

The League of Nations also was called upon to aid against the anti-Jewish drive and help in settling refugees in Palestine.

Wedell Makes World Record In Land Plane

296.34-Mile Speed Not Official, But He Will Try for Mark.

Curtiss-Wright-Reynold Airport, Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—A speed faster than the existing record of 294.38 miles an hour for land planes was made today by James R. Wedell, race pilot, of Patterson, La., at the International Air Races today.

Wedell sent a racer of his own design over a 3-kilometer straight-away course at 296.34 miles an hour. The mark was not official. Wedell carried no barograph for measuring the speed, but he was timed by officials of the air show.

He announced he will attempt in a trophy race tomorrow to better the 294.38-mile record—held by Jimmie Doolittle—by at least 4.96 miles an hour, and thus set an official record.

Col. Roscoe Turner qualified for the trophy race today with a speed of 291.14 miles an hour on one lap.

Close finishes in races on the day's program thrilled 25,000 spectators. Roy Minor, of Los Angeles, piloted a plane at 195.40 miles an hour to win the 50-mile $1,800 main event.

Envoy to Lead Insull Battle

U. S. Minister MacVeagh Will Prepare Athens Extradition Case.

Athens, Sept. 3 (AP).—Lincoln MacVeagh, arriving tomorrow as new United States Minister to Greece, is understood here to have special instructions regarding handling of the case against Samuel Insull, whom the American Government has been trying to extradite on charges following upon the breakdown of his public utility chain.

An eminent Greek lawyer said that unless Insull received money or otherwise benefited from the alleged fraudulent bankruptcy of his interests, or through transfer of property in contemplation of bankruptcy, Greece would not sanction demand for extradition.

He said if evidence is produced that Insull did benefit, this would be punishable under Greek law and Insull would be handed over to the custody of the United States.

7 Prisoners Free After Bold Breaks

Three Flee New York Jail; Carolina Slayers Out.

New York, Sept. 3 (AP).—Three prisoners escaped from Tombs Prison today and after leaping into a commandered taxicab vanished in the congested lower East Side.

Police cars bristling with submachine guns screamed through the narrow, dingy streets of the district for hours looking for the trio.

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 3 (AP).—Four prisoners, two serving life sentences for murders, made daring escapes from North Carolina's State Prison here today. Two guards were suspended.

The convicts sawed the bars to their cell doors on the top tier, ripped boards from the prison's roof and dropped four floors to the ground outside on a rope made of sheets.

Lindberghs May Fly To Newcastle Today

Newcastle, England, Sept. 3 (AP).—Information tonight said Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh might fly here from Copenhagen tomorrow. The fliers' plans are subject to change.

120-Mile Wind Hammers Coast; Barometer Falls

Gale Velocity Reported at Miami as Communications Along Eastern Shore Are Shattered; 6,000 Flee From Menaced Lake Area.

Florida's east coast was battered by a 120-mile-an-hour hurricane early this morning.

Thousands of residents were fleeing for their lives from the path of the cyclonic wind which roared inland from the Bahamas last night.

Virtually all communications in West Palm Beach and Miami were disrupted shortly after midnight. Latest meager reports were sent by amateur radio operators.

Another terrific tempest that wrecked Cuba last Friday, leaving 100 dead and 100,000 homeless, is swirling across the gulf to the Texas coast between Corpus Christi and Freeport.

Richard W. Gray, meteorologist, said that at 11:15 p. m. north-northwest winds were blowing at hurricane velocity of 75 miles per hour at West Palm Beach. The barometer there had fallen to 28.81.

This was a forerunner of the 120-miles-an-hour hurricane roaring northwestward from the Bahamas.

Residents along a 100-mile stretch from Miami to Melbourne are rapidly evacuating to higher ground. A steady stream of automobiles were leaving West Palm Beach. Two special trains carried hundreds from the Everglades area at Lake Okeechobee.

Communications Fail.

Radio was resorted to to establish communications as telephone and telegraph lines were rapidly failing.

Miami had gale winds of 35 miles per hour with a barometer of 29.66.

Lashing rainstorms accompanied the hurricane.

A Coast Guard radio report said the center of the storm was striking slightly southward of West Palm Beach.

The storm, craddled in the Atlantic east of the Turks Islands, battered the northern Bahama group for 24 hours. The wind reached 120-mile-an-hour proportions at Abaco. No loss of life was reported, although hundreds of homes and buildings were shattered.

Ships in Distress.

Several ships were reported in distress and possible disaster was feared by Coast Guard headquarters in the Florida area.

A Coast Guard cutter from Fort Lauderdale went to the aid of the steamer Western Sword, which reported she had lost her tail shaft and propeller off Bethel Shoals, near Wabasso.

Three cutters from Jacksonville started for the storm area on reports that a member of the crew of the Western Sword was severely injured, and that an oil barge with seven men aboard was adrift.

Evacuate Lake Residents.

Trains were dispatched to the region around Lake Okeechobee to evacuate between 5,000 and 6,000 persons who might be endangered should hurricane winds sweep waters out of the lake.

Fort Lauderdale, approximately 75 miles south of West Palm Beach, depended on amateur radio alone for outside communication. There, at 12:30 a. m., the barometer had dropped 3 points in 30 minutes to 29.56.

Three thousand refugees, from Clewiston and Moorehaven, were taken to the Roebling estate near Lake Placid, by one train. Clewiston and Moorehaven are on the western shore of Lake Okeechobee, over which the storm is expected to pass.

Trucks carried 500 from South Bay and 300 from Lake Harbor to Clewiston, where they took refuge in a sugar mill. Another thousand persons were waiting at Belle Glade, on the southeastern tip of Lake Okeechobee, for transportation to safer territory.

At Pahokee residents sought shelter in schools and other public buildings.

Meanwhile, the Cuban cabinet was called in special session by President Carlos Manuel de Cespedes today and approved appropriation of $50,000 for the stricken area.

The President will call on United States Ambassador Sumner Welles to "accept gratefully an offer of

Policeman Surprises Bandits; Shot to Death

Bridgeville, Pa., Sept. 4 (AP).—Herbert P. Brantlinger, 27, a State highway patrolman, was shot and killed tonight by two men he surprised in the act of holding up a filling station. His assailants fled.

France Is Able To Crush Foe, Boncour Warns

Nation Can Resist Violence, He Asserts, Promising Aid to Austria.

Trebeurden, France, Sept. 3 (AP).—Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour, reiterating France's determination to safeguard Austria's independence, declared today "France is strong enough to resist attempts at violence."

Premier Daladier's visit to newly built fortifications on the German frontier, M. Paul-Boncour asserted, was a "fitting response to attitudes of which the least one can say is that they trouble profoundly the atmosphere of peace."

Speaking at the dedication of a monument to Aristide Briand, he said:

"No one was clearer in affirming the necessary independence of Austria. No one manifested a firmer will against any attack on it."

He referred to the four-power pact, concluded recently between England, France, Italy and Germany, as a step toward economic organization of central Europe.

Referring to the 1925 security pact negotiated by Briand, he declared: "The more certain menaces appear—which will not cause us to lose our calm, but which require us to remain vigilant—the more we should appreciate the man who obtained signature by England and Italy."

French Troops to Drill.

Vitry-le-Francois, France, Sept. 3 (AP).—Thirteen thousand French troops were massed along a 90-mile front tonight for army maneuvers in the old Champagne battlefields.

The "exercises" were to be much smaller than the war games of previous years, as a matter of economy, but the maneuvers will include all branches of the army. Two forces, one of 7,000 and the other of 6,000 troops, oppose each other, and one division of cavalry will be fully motorized for the first time.

Justice Farrington, Of Maine Court, Dies

Augusta, Me., Sept. 3 (AP).—Frank G. Farrington, associate justice of Maine, and former speaker of the Maine House of Representatives and president of the State Senate, died at his home here tonight. He would have been 60 years old September 11.

Gran Chaco Battle Casualty List Large

La Paz, Bolivia, Sept. 3 (AP).—An official communique today said a Paraguayan attack north of Fort Rios Gallardo was beaten off yesterday with many casualties. All sectors of the Gran Chaco battle front were relatively quiet today.

Ickes Oil Curb Wtihout Fixed PriceApproved

Leaders in Industry Claim Allocation Should Be Given Trial.

(Associated Press.)

Full approval of Secretary Ickes' decision to try production control before attempting to fix prices under the oil industry's recovery code was expressed yesterday by leaders of the faction within the business favoring Federal price regulation.

Several members of the petroleum trade's planning and coordination committee, administrative agency with Ickes in supervising the $12,000,000,000 industry in the recovery campaign, described his verdict as "the wise thing to do."

"We must wait and see what the various States do with respect to the Federal allocation of production," several agreed.

Wrangling Denied.

Committee members discounted reports of wrangling in the group's sessions and said they felt the industry would support the program.

Because committee members have agreed that any statements should be made public through Secretary Ickes, they declined formal comment, but one outspoken advocate of full price regulation said:

"The Secretary's course was the only normal and natural thing to do. The first major step is the allocation and control of production. The second natural step will be price regulation if it becomes necessary in the opinion of the administration."

In announcing the code in effect without any price control, Ickes said that "no door was closed" by his decision. He was expected to talk over fully with President Roosevelt this vital point of administration principle and policy this week.

Allocation Schedule.

As allocated by the administration, the national oil production daily after 7 p. m. Friday will be 2,409,700 barrels, a decrease of around 350,000 barrels as compared with present output.

Texas received the largest allotment, 975,000 barrels; 540,000 went to Oklahoma and 480,000 to California. Kansas was alloted 111,000 barrels.

The production allocation was slighlty higher than had been expected in oil circles, but the increase was attributed to the prohibition against withdrawals from the storage for the time being.

Hurricane Strikes Florida East Coast

aid made by the American Red Cross."

Informed that famine and disease threaten many north coast cities where the full force of the Friday storm was felt, the sanitation department dispatched a fleet of trucks loaded with medical supplies to Matanzas, Cardenas, Sagua la Grande, Isabela de Sagua and other towns in Matanzas and Santa Clara Provinces.

Other governmental agencies moved to aid.

Damage in Sugar Area.

Destruction was heavy in the sugar shipping area and a score or more sugar mills suffered major damage. It was estimated a half million bags of sugar were destroyed.

Along the coast line considerable damage was done to docks and harbor facilities, three freighters grounded and a number of launches and sailboats sunk.

Telephone and telegraph communication between Havana and midisland Camaguey was disrupted and travelers, newspaper men and government inspectors told of the suffering in that area.

The communications department here was advised tonight that 35 persons were killed and several scores injured at Cristo Key, summer resort on the north coast of Santa Clara Province.

Texas Coast Preparing.

Houston, Tex., Sept. 3 (AP).—A hurricane, reported to be the most devastating of a season that has been marked by unexampled fury of the elements, roared toward the Texas coast tonight, apparently but a few hours away.

At the rate and direction of its movement it was estimated the center would strike the Texas coast about noon tomorrow.

Shipping was at a standstill and vessels hugged their berths as the Gulf storm and a second tempest off the Florida coast forced owners to cancel sailing dates.

Barometers from Sabine Pass to Port Aransas were falling late in the afternoon.

An exodus from coastal towns began in earnest as the endangered points battened down for a blow. Port Aransas on Mustang Island, about 200 miles southwest of here, reported 250 of the township's 500 residents had moved to the mainland.

retary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Roper and Attorney General Cummings.

Brief radio talks over a Nationwide National Broadcasting Co. network will be given by Secretary Dern and Commissioner Reichelderfer from the reviewing stand.

$1,490 in Cash Prizes.

Cash prizes of $1,490 and 52 trophies and silver cups will be awarded in numerous competitions.

Prizes and awards are given for the most beautiful floats; the funniest; for the largest representations of volunteer fire companies; for the best bands and drum corps, and in competitions afterward at the Sylvan Theater.

President Roosevelt, himself a volunteer fireman of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., unable to attend, has sent his best wishes.

Thousands of persons yesterday attended services in the Sylvan Theater for firemen who gave their lives in the battle against flames.

Representative McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, spoke; Alfred Geiger, treasurer of the National Firemen's Association, was master of ceremonies; the Rev. Francis J. Buckley pronounced the invocation, and the Rev. James H. Taylor, the benediction.

Warren Dues, three District policemen and one District fireman had medals pinned on them by Brig. Gen. John A. Johnston, former District Commissioner.

Special Police Traffic Plans.

An ambulance will be stationed at every corner passed by the parade. Those who may be injured or become ill will have instant attention.

The precautions were arranged by Acting Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald and Albert Sardo. Hospitals cooperated in furnishing doctors and nurses. Private firms gave the ambulances.

President Planning Labor Peace Move

ing asking Attorney General Cummings for an opinion.

The National Labor Board, under the chairmanship of Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, has before it already for arbitration strikes in various parts of the country, with reports of others brewing as labor and capital stand opposed on their respective views of the recovery act.

Labor Day Adopted in '94.

Labor Day dates to a meeting of the New York Central Labor Union, May 8, 1882. P. J. McGuire, founder of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, proposed a fete day for workingmen.

McGuire's suggestion was indorsed enthusiastically. Before long New York was celebrating Labor Day—the first Monday in September—as enthusiastically as the Fourth of July.

Oregon adopted the first Monday in September as a legal holiday. Then the American Federation of Labor redoubled its efforts and in 1894 the Kyle bill, making Labor Day a national holiday, was passed.

On June 28, 1894, President Cleveland signed the Kyle bill and labor had its own holiday.

The late Samuel Gompers, famous president of the American Federation of Labor, announced legalization of the holiday at the 1894 convention. The day has been a big one for labor ever since.

Johnson Drops Precedent of Writing Speeches Flying to Meetings.

(Associated Press.)

The precedent President Roosevelt set last year in writing his speech accepting the Democratic nomination while en route to Chicago by plane has been carried on by his industrial recovery chief until yesterday.

Every speech Gen. Johnson has made out of the Capital since becoming NRA administrator was dictated in the air.

But the address he is to deliver in Chicago tonight was ready last night before his departure, and this time he went by train.

President Sails Whaleboat

(United Press.)

The yacht Nourmahal, carrying President Roosevelt back to Washington from his vacation, headed for Chesapeake lightship at the entrance of Chesapeake Bay last night, said a radio dispatch to the Navy Department.

A 12-foot shark was caught and lost from the Nourmahal yesterday morning, and later President Roosevelt and Vincent Astor, host aboard the yacht, cruised for several hours in a whaleboat.

"An all-night run from Montauk Point brought President Roosevelt today into Gulf Stream waters about 150 miles east of Cape May.

"Blue skies, almost cloudless, light breezes, sunlight and an unusually calm sea combined to make conditions ideal throughout the day. The Nourmahal sailed out of Fort Pond Bay, off Montauk, at 10 o'clock daylight saving time last night. Ten hours later the westerly edge of the Gulf Stream was reached. Soon afterward one of the yacht's crew caught a shark measuring 12 feet. No sooner was it hauled up the ship's side, however, than it lashed with such fury that it succeeded in escaping its captors and was free again.

"The cruise continued due south until midday, when the course was changed to the westward in the direction of Fenwick Island Shoal, off Ocean City, Md.

"While on this course the Nourmahal was stopped. Its motor whaleboat was lowered and the President, accompanied by Vincent Astor, his host, left the big yacht. Two members of the Nourmahal's crew went along, but it was the President and Astor, acting respectively as skipper and crew of the whaleboat, who sailed it over ocean waters, two miles deep thereabouts, until it returned safely to its mother ship several hours later."

Although a tropical storm was sweeping toward the Florida coast, there appeared to be no danger that the Nourmahal would run into heavy weather.

St. Louis, Sept. 3 (AP).—Dress manufacturers here have suffered a loss of about $10,000,000 worth of business as a result of the strike launched almost a month ago, Howard Elliott, attorney for the Associated Garment Industries of St. Louis, stated tonight.

The strike, which, in addition to those employed in dress shops, includes about 3,000 employes in men's clothing shops and about 2,000 hat shop workers, today continued with little violence. Strikers are seeking recognition of their union, higher wages and shorter working hours.

Aquia Church Celebrates

In a pilgrimage to a shrine hallowed by time and associations, several hundred persons yesterday journeyed to Aquia Church, 30 miles south of Alexandria, for annual "homecoming" services.

Aquia Episcopal Church was first erected in 1752. Before carpenters had finished their work on the interior, it was gutted by fire. The walls were left standing. The parish was not able to restore the church until 1757.

The brick building is in the shape of a Maltese Cross. The pews are still in the old square form, with seats running around. Those who come late must sit with back to the chancel.

The beautiful pulpit, high in the air, is placed at one of the points of this fourth arm of the cross. In the front face of this gallery is placed a tablet bearing the name of the minister and members of the vestry when the church was restored in 1757. This is as follows:

Several years ago families connected with the church formed the Aquia Association for the preservation and care of the church. Miss Pickett Waller is president; Miss Georgia Moncure, secretary, and William Leeds Wright, treasurer. The board of trustees comprises these officers with Mrs. Wirt Powers, Mrs. E. L. C. Derrick and Mrs. Alfred Pyke.

Services yesterday were conducted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Henry Heaton. The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Richmond, a former rector of Aquia Church, preached.

A picnic dinner was served on the grounds.

Take Care of Neighbor, Wallace Asks Citizens

Hershey, Pa., Sept. 3 (AP).—Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, today appealed to the Nation to change from its forefathers' spirit of "rugged individualism" to one of "genuine concern for your neighbor."

Speaking at the dedication of the $3,000,000 Hershey Community Center, he asserted the "new social machinery" under President Roosevelt's economic program demands the change to a broad, national outlook.

Green's Labor Day Message Plea for Unionization by NRA

Asserts Without Workers' Cooperation Recovery Drive Will Fail.

(Associated Press.)

Jubilant labor today salutes a rising Labor Day sun as the full dawn of a new era for the American worker, finding Government, capital and employe joined in unprecedented war against economic foes.

Pausing while the country's millions availed themselves of their last fling at summer's holiday joys, chieftains of the Nation's workers called upon labor to join fully into a partnership with employers for the success of the recovery drive.

Secretary Perkins, recounting the NRA objectives, said that if advantage of its strength were taken, "we should all come out of this struggle in the good, old-fashioned American way of victory."

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for his Labor Day message to the millions enrolled in that organization urged unionization and organization to gain full benefits from the campaign.

"Without the cooperation of labor the National Recovery Administration would be fatally handicapped," he said. "Never did the Union have a more vital or constructive function than it does in our National emergency.

"It is essential to the formulation of codes and to their administration so as to carry out the purposes of the recovery program. Workers outside of unions will be unable to participate and by their failure to participate will lessen the influence of the organized groups."

The Federation of Labor, in its monthly survey of business, announced that as "September opens we can already see clear signs of real progress" from the general campaign, estimating upward of 2,000,000 had gone back to work between March and September.

Mary Anderson, director of the Women's Department of the Labor Department, in a summation of achievements for feminine workers, held their base pay scales had been boosted and that "our present cooperative program for industry, business and labor, with the Government as the directing force, seems the most logical and hopeful solution of our difficulties."

'War' on Union Issue Attacked By Atterbury

Condemns Attempts by Any to Seek Advantage in Emergency.

Philadelphia, Sept. 3 (AP).—President W. W. Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania railroad, in an NRA address tonight said any attempt to take advantage in the present emergency to fight out the question of unionism or non-unionism "should meet with universal condemnation."

"The question of wages can be easily settled," he said. "The big object is to get men to work as fast as possible. The closed shop question—whether union closed or non-union closed—should not enter into the present situation. Collective bargaining is recognized by the code and this can be union or non-union, as the employes themselves may determine.

"Since July 1, the Pennsylvania railroad has put ten thousand additional men to work, and for the country as a whole I roughly estimate at least a hundred thousand additional men have been given employment in that period by all railroads, and that another hundred thousand can be put to work before winter if business can continue at its present trend.

"Collective bargaining has been used successfully for years on the railroad of which I am president, and to the mutual satisfaction of the employes and the management. I thoroughly believe in the principle of collective bargaining.

"I suport the right of workers in an industry to be represented by men of their own choosing in dealing with management respecting matters which mutually concern employers and employes.

"The national industry recovery act embodies genuine wisdom in refraining from specifying any particular form of organization through which the negotiations shall be carried on. This protects the fundamental rights of both sides. For that protection both should be grateful, and under that protection both should undertake to cooperate in the National interest."

Hitler Exhorts Nazis to Teach Gospel of Unity

Ends Nuremberg Rally With Claim War Not Needed for Honor.

Nuremberg, Germany, Sept. 3 (U.P.).—Chancellor Adolph Hitler closed the tremendous fourth biennial Nazi party convention today with a stirring appeal to the massed thousands to go over the country spreading the gospel of unity behind the Nazi regime.

"The world must not see here an expression to win new laurels on the battlefield," Hitler declared. "The German people are aware that no war could gain us greater honor than was gained buy us in the last. It is unnecessary to re-establish the honor of our nation on the battlefield, for it never was taken from us there."

Postwar Chief Blamed.

The chancellor flung the challenge for the nation's downfall to leaders after the war was lost, and called on the people to support him in his program of rebuilding the national spirit.

"Dishonor was visited upon us not by the East or the West," Hitler cried, "but by our home soil. But we have expunged this dishonor, and this display here shall signify nothing more than the great, festive recognition of German unity."

The hundreds of thousands who listened stood in varying moods of rapt attention one moment to hysterical cheering the next.

Review of His Legions.

The final day of this unprecedented gathering—where Hitler has been hailed more thunderously than any kaiser—began with reveille at 3:30 a. m. for thousands of Nazi storm troopers. The rhythmic beat of their drums stirred the sleepy city, tired out after three days of hectic celebrations climaxed with last night's huge fireworks display in which scores fainted and 50 were given treatment at hospitals. The explosions were heard for miles around, and the din sounded like a major engagement in the World War. The excitement was inexpressible.

At 8 a. m., Hitler arrived and reviewed a parade of 100,000 storm troopers, marching in smart goose-step. In dedicating 126 new flags of regiments throughout the Reich, Hitler touched each with the "blood flag," a bloodstained memento of the abortive "putsch" in Munich, which he led.

Danes Resent Nazi Move.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Sept. 3 (U.P.)—Warning was voiced tonight by Premier T. A. M. Stauning that Denmark was prepared to withstand, by force if necessary, any effort to revise the Schleswig frontier. The Premier's declaration was in reply to persistent Nazi agitation.

"Anyone can work for a change in the law," the Premier said, "but illegal action will meet with hard refutation from the strong, united will of Denmark.

"We will not be governed by machine guns, private police nor corps of soldiers."

Sleep Malady Kills 4 More

Additional U. S. Experts From Washington on Way to St. Louis.

St. Louis, Sept. 3 (AP).—An intensive study of each case of encephalatis, with the aid of four more Government experts, was planned tonight in an effort to discover the cause and mode of transmission of the disease.

Three deaths occurred today, sending the total to 65. Seventeen new cases were unofficially reported, bringing the total to 478.

"It will be necessary to visit each home where the disease has occurred," said a health official.

The Federal experts expected to arrive here tomorrow, Drs. M. V. Veldee, L. F. Badger, J. O Dean and W. G. Workman, will direct this field work.

Dr. J. P. Leake, senior surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, who has directed the attack on the St. Louis epidemic, has gone to Washington to confer with Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming.

Vermont Will Vote Tuesday on Repeal

Final Drive by Partisans of Both Sides Ends.

Montpelier, Vt., Sept. 3 (AP).—The final drive for votes for repeal or retention of the eighteenth amendment closed today. Next Tuesday the State votes.

Bishop Edwin Hughes, of the Methodist Church, issued the final appeal for support of those favoring retention of prohibition. The repealists heard Representative James Wadsworth, of New York, speak here in a plea to make Vermont the twenty-fifth State to register its verdict against prohibition.

For several months leading partisans have been brought to Vermont in an effort to sway the voters. Dr. Clarence True Wilson and Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of Washington, have spoken in several places in a "resist repeal" campaign, while the antiprohibitionists have sponsored Wadsworth and James A. Farley, the Postmaster General.

Chicago Police Search For Hoodlums Fails

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Police visited nearly a hundred haunts of criminals early today in a futile attempt to arrest hoodlums named in vagrancy warrants issued last week as a part of the current "cleanup campaign."

Lieut. Andrew Barry, in charge of the raiding squads, said the gangsters apparently had fled the city.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Abraham Lincoln and Mary Todd

Unfanthomable indeed are the workings of fate, which wrought together the lives of two such dissimilar beings as Abraham Lincoln and Mary Todd Lincoln. He was the son of poverty-stricken pioneers in Indiana; she was born of an aristocratic Kentucky family.

We are told she was beautiful and certainly her pictures show her to be a young woman of poise. Lincoln's ungainly length of limb and homely features, on the other hand, were at times a distinct handicap in winning public favor.

Aristocratic Belle Healed Heart Broken Over Ann Rutledge.

By Elizabeth E. Poe.

"ALL that I am or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother," Abraham Lincoln once wrote of Nancy Hanks.

Her memory, no doubt, was the dominant force in his life. It is a curious fact that the same year, 1818, which took Lincoln's mother from him also brought into the world, on December 13, another woman-child, destined to play a high part in his meteoric and tragic career and to become his wife and the mother of his children.

Little did the barefoot lad of nine years, sitting at the foot of his mother's grave, we may fancy, on that December day in 1818, know that fate was marking down as one of the entries in his Book of Life.

There seemed to be little probability that Abe Lincoln, son of a poverty-stricken pioneer in Southern Indiana, and Mary Todd, the child just born to an arristocratic Kentucky family, favored by fortune from birth, would ever meet and that their paths in life should be united.

Mary Todd had been born with a "silver spoon in her mouth." Young Abe Lincoln had come into this world in a rude cabin, and his mother, Nancy Hanks, had known the bitter, as well as the sweet of motherhood.

A few short weeks before, Abe had helped his father fashion a coffin out of a log, in which Nancy Hanks rested "the peace that passeth all understanding."

Gave World a Man of Destiny.

No doubt Nnacy Hanks' simple ambitions for her son had never gone beyond the fond hope that he might be a "good man." To her untutored mind no dream appeared that the son, who was to be her own means to lasting remembrance by future generations, would come to hold the destinies of a Nation in his ungainly hands.

Yet his birth in 1809 was to add luster in history, even to a year. Lincoln's year mates are indeed worthy of mention. Even, as from a Kentucky cabin in that year, came the great Lincoln, to a country vicarage in the west of England appeared the songbird, Tennyson and another English home saw the birth of a son, William Ewarts Gladstone, who was to become also a champion of human libreties.

Poland saw the birth of Chopin, the madman of music; the older Germany gave Mendelssohn to translate the music of the spheres for mankind and America saw arise in the heavens of literature the poetic star of Edgar Allan Poe.

Like Abe Lincoln, Mary Todd was to lose her mother early in life. When she was 7 her mother died. Within two years came a stepmother, just as Abe Lincoln found a stepmother succeeding his own in his father's affections before Nancy Hanks had been dead many months.

Mary's Stepmother Lettered.

The second Mrs. Robert Smith Todd was a lady of distinction from Virginia, and hr ancestry boasted men and women of scholarly attainments and high ideals. Very calmly and competently she undertook the care and training of the six stepchildren, ranging in age from 18 months to 14 years.

Little Mary did well in school and had an amazing love for poetry and could quote pages of it. She has been described at this period as being "very highly strung, nervous, impulsive, excitable, having an emotional temperament much like an April day, sunning all over with laughter one moment, the next crying as though her heart would break."

She was regarded as beautiful, and had friends by the score. We may leave her for a time now in her happy Kentucky home to see what Abe Lincoln, nine years her senior, was doing at this time.

There were no happy school days for Abe Lincoln. Life to him was a hard taskmaster. He grew up in pioneer surroundings, enduring hardships, knowing only the primitive manners, conversations and ambitions of sparsely settled backwoods communities. Schools were rare and the teachers but poorly qualified for their tasks. Lincoln's entire schooling, in five different schools, amounted to less than twelve months. But he became a good speller and an excellent penman. His own mother had taught him to read. In early boyhood he read and reread the Bible, Aesop, Robinson Crusoe, Pilgrim's Progress and a history of the United States. Burns and Shakespeare later became his favorite poets. From them and from the Bible he gathered that vast understanding of human nature which was one of his most enduring traits of character. At 17, he had attained the extraordinary height of 6 feet 4 inches.

Clerks and Studies Law.

When he was 19, the nomad Tom Lincoln moved his family again to New Salem, Ill. There Abe became a clerk in the local store and studied law on the side. His local fame grew and in 1935 the young attorney was chosen to represent his district in the State Legislature at Vandalia, then the capital of Illinois.

So short-sighted are human beings that few would have been attracted by his appearance, at that time, in homely, homespun trousers stuffed into tops of cowhide boots, a hat of rabbit fur, felt with so long a nap that its fringe at times mingled in his heavy black hair. Beneath the uncouth hat and the equally unruly hair was a broad, high forehead, luminous gray eyes of keen intelligence which the love of his fellowman had softened to gentleness, eyes which now and then flashed gleams of humor, and a full, wide mouth with innate gentleness lingering around its corners.

Love was in his heart, too; love for gentle Ann Rutledge, of Salem, a picture to linger in any man's memory. She had been deserted and jilted by one John McNeil, but Abe Lincoln had cured the hurt. Seventeen-year-old Mary Todd, the belle of Lexington, knew nought of this or of the twist fate was soon to give her own affairs, that she and not Ann Rutledge was to be the bride of Abraham Lincoln and go down in history as one of the Ladies of the White House in Washington.

Death Intervenes.

While Mary Tood laughed and danced and blossomed into young womanhood in Kentucky, in Illinois a darker scene was being played on the stage of Abraham Lincoln's life. Ann Rutledge was dying. Lincoln and she had to part. What passed between them in that hour of parting no one else ever knew. It put into his eyes that look of inner sorrow all men were to note afterward. It was months before he could recover from her death. Frequently he said:

"My heart is buried in the grave of that dear girl."

But with time, even such grief as Lincoln experienced, became, at least, partially assuaged. Youth will be served and even the Lincolns among us are but mortal.

Fame beckoned him onward and the path was up to its heights.

A fellow legislator at Vandalia, John Todd Stuart, persuaded Lincoln to form a law partnership with him and they opened an office in Springfield, Ill. The fates were busy now, for John Todd Stuart was a first cousin of Mary Todd and the way was opening for her meeting with Abraham Lincoln.

Mary, 18 now, a graduate of Mme. Mentelle's fashionable Lexington school, came to Springfield to visit her two sisters, Mrs. Ninian Edwards and Mrs. William Wallace. Naturally, Mary heard much of Cousin John's new law partner, Abe Lincoln, his melancholy history, his ability, his broken heart and his uncouthness. She longed to meet him. But somehow they did not meet on that first visit. But she did not forget what she had heard of this unique character.

She Returns and Meets Him.

So when she was invited to revisit Springfield in 1839, she accepted the offer with eagerness. Perhaps now she would meet Abe Lincoln. And they did meet, at a dance—a strange place, surely, for Abe Lincoln to be. Her niece, Miss Katherine Helm, who wrote a splendid story of her life, has told of that first meeting in these words:

"The girls in their flowerlike frocks, the soft bursts of laughter, the many gleaming candles casting long wavering lines of light across the polished floor, the cadenced strains of a waltz making dreamy accompaniment to the gliding feet of the dancers. The beaux who remembered Mary flocked around her, importuning her for the first dance.

"As she slowly circled the room, her attention was attracted by the appearance of a tall, spare, but powerfully built man, in earnest conversation with her brother-in-law. His face was a fascinating combination of poetic mysticism, earnest purpose and quaint humor. Just the kind of strength and ruggedness, too, that had attracted Mary when as a little girl she had declared 'Henry Clay is the handsomest man in town.'

" 'Who is that man?' she asked, with some excitement in her voice, losing for the moment her little Southern drawl. She had already divined that he must be the much-talked-of Lincoln.

"Their eyes met. His with a searching, appraising glance. Shyly Mary glanced at him through half-closed eyes. Her heart beat a little faster and the faint wild rose in her cheeks deepened."

Romance Is Hectic.

The romance that began that night was hectic. Engagements were announced, and even dates for the marriage, but they were broken. Naturally, Mary's famliy felt some opposition. He was poor and Mary had been reared in luxury. Could they be happy without the delicacies of life to which she had become accustomed? Meantime, another suitor, Stephen A. Douglas, polished, brilliant and accustomed to the amenities of life, had appeared on the scene. Which would finally win the vivacius belle's hand interested the whole community.

Those betting on Abe Lincoln had a chance to garner their reward for, on November 4, 1842, in the midst of a torrential rainstorm, Mary Todd and Abraham Lincoln became man and wife.

Their married life began in a little inn, The Globe Tavern." But Mary did not complain. She believed in the star of Abraham Lincoln. When tiny Robert Todd Lincoln arrived on August 1, 1843, her cup of happiness seemed running over. By 1847, Mr. Lincoln had became a member of Congress and his finances had improved likewise.

Four sons were born to them of whom only, the first, Robert Todd Lincoln, grew to manhood. He lived, until he died a few years ago, the last part of his life on N street, in Georgetown, where his widow still resides.

Higher and higher still Abe Lincoln climbed the ladder of fame. For Mary Todd Lincoln came White House days, Civil War days, with their dread messages of woe from her Southern kin, with her brothers and other relatives in Confederate gray, and that red letter night when Patti sang in the Executive Mansion and ended her program with the "Last Rose of Summer," at which Mrs. Lincoln wept openly. How the months swept by until the surrender of Lee!

New Tragedy Waits.

Perhaps Mary Todd Lincoln dreamed now that peace and love could abide together, even in the White House. It was the night of April 14, 1865, and as Lincoln and his wife drove to Ford's Theater he turned to her and said:

"Mary, we have had a hard time of it since we came to Washington, but the war is over and, with God's blessing, we may hope for four years of peace and happiness. Then we will go back to Illinois and pass the rest of our lives in quiet."

Through the sweetness of that dream, as she sat in the Presidential box, came the sharp crack of the assassin's pistol, and deepest sorrow closed in on Mary Todd Lincoln forever. Only half-heard were her husband's dying moans and the half-whispered remark of Stanton, "Now he belongs to the ages," as the soul of Lincoln took flight.

The weary weeks, the months, the years passed, and living became dimmer and dimmer for Mary Lincoln Todd. Tad was her constant companion, but Fate had another blow yet in store for her. On July 15, 1871, he died and the desolate widow was plunged to new depths of grief.

As death neared, in 1882, she wrote to a friend:

"Ah, my dear friend, you will rejoice when you know that I have gone to my husband and children."

It was on July 16, 1882, that she died. She was laid to rest beside the man who had taught her all that romance and honor can bring to the human heart.

Fame Smiled Upon Them, But Tragedies Brought Only Deepest Sorrow.

Own Invention Now Blamed in Pinedo's Death

Experts Believed Aviator Lost Control Because of New "Gadget."

New York, Sept. 3 (A.P.).—Belief a new "gadget" Gen. Francisco de Pinedo invented failed to work and sent him to his flaming death when he lost control of his monoplane, was held today by aviation experts.

It was disclosed the noted Italian flier had a metal cross-piece made as an extension to the joystick that would enable him to add leverage as he attempted to lift the plane.

Experts believe the extension slipped as De Pinedo drew it back and the stick wobbled with the sharply swaying plane while the flier struggled to regain the control.

Was Seen Standing Up.

Several who saw the crash as the Marquis attempted to hop off for Bagdad on a nonstop flight intended as a come back after several years of comparative obscurity, said they observed De Pinedo standing upright at one stage of his spurt down the concrete runway.

Experts expressed the opinion that the flier was jerked to his feet when the cross-piece pulled loose. The extension was to have been used only for the take-off and was t have been thrown away later.

Body to Go to Italy.

Meanwhile the body of the marquis, wealthy bachelor once reported engaged to the former Princess Giovanna Elizabeth, of Italy, lay in the morgue of Kings County Hospital. It will be sent to Italy for an official military funeral.

De Pinedo had several "gadgets" in his flying gas tank. One was to sound a siren when the ship got off its course, and another to squirt water into his face in case the siren failed to rouse him as he catnapped.

New Cruiser Ready To Go Down Ways

Daughter of Hoover Aid to Christen Minneapolis.

Philadelphia, Sept. 3 (AP).—Thirteenth of 18 10,000-ton cruisers the United States was authorized to build under the treaty of London, the Minneapolis, is being prepared for launching at the Philadelphia Navy Yard Wednesday.

Miss Laura Newton, of Minneapolis, whose father, Walter H. Newton, applied the first rivet when the keel was laid in June, 1931, has been invited to christen the vessel. Newton was secretary to President Hoover.

The Minneapolis, 578 feet long, with a beam of 61 feet 10 inches, will be the first vessel launched at the navy yard since the destroyer tender Dobbin in 1924.

Witnesses Chosen In Love-Balm Suit

Read-Claire Windsor Trial Reopens Wednesday.

Los Angeles, Sept. 3 (AP).—Court evidence to finish out the other two sides of the Claire Windsor-Alfred Read, jr.—Marian Read "love triangle," involving the lattert's $100,000 suit for alienation of her former husband's affections, was marshalled today in Oakland and Los Angeles.

The Oakland stock broker took advantage of the holiday to visit Oakland and arrange to bring several witnesses here for resumption of the trial Wednesday. He said they would testify his love for his former wife was dead before he met the actress.

Attorneys for Mrs. Read, silent as to their plans, said they believed the numerous love letters written by Read and Miss Windsor had greatly benefited their case.

The Firemen's Parade.

For eleven years a parade of firemen has been held on Labor Day in Washington. It is now a fixed event, happily dated so as to afford an opportunity for all citizens to lend encouragement to their protectors and to take note of the advance made in the art of fire-fighting, both in cities and villages. Today's event, sponsored by The Washington Post, promises to be an imposing spectacle and will be witnessed by a large number of residents and visitors.

Volunteer firemen from eleven States will take part in today's parade, accompanied in many instances by their home bands. The desire of most young men to participate in a march on historic Pennsylvania avenue at least once in their lives is reinforced in the case of volunteer fire companies from neighboring States, for here they not only enjoy the sights of Washington but take home with them valuable information gained by comparing the equipments and methods of other fire companies. They are better Americans and better firemen as a result of their excursion to the Nation's Capital.

This year, as in the past, police floats will be evident in the parade. They are most welcome additions to the showing of municipal public protection agencies. The Police Department is co-operating cordially with the Fire Department in making the parade a success from every point of view. Cabinet officers and other Federal authorities, as well as members of the diplomatic corps, are interested in the event. Service bands of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps will contribute to the vivacity of the occasion.

Fair weather will conduce greatly to the brilliance of the parade, but if the skies should frown the firemen will go forward undaunted. Rain or shine, they face duty day and night. Rain or shine, they will be greeted and cheered by tens of thousands of friends and well-wishers today.

Highway Safety Month.

September has been chosen as a period during which a concerted effort will be made by motorists and many organizations to reduce the heavy toll of automobile accidents. This month was chosen because the records show it to be one of the worst of the year for motor fatalities. It is a time of heavy travel on all roads. Returning vacationists line the highways, children return to school, pavements become slippery, and visibility is frequently impaired by rain or fog.

Motor accidents in the fall months average nearly 25 per cent greater than during any other quarter of the year. So the nation-wide campaign has been inaugurated for this month in an endeavor to impress upon the millions of Americans who operate cars the fact that policing and legislation are not enough, and that caution must be observed by the drivers themselves.

Various motor and highway organizations have been enlisted for promotion of this safety month campaign, and civic and school authorities are cooperating. The Commissioners of the District have joined the Governors of all the States in support of the accident prevention movement.

A month devoted to emphasizing safety rules should be useful. If it can be shown that courtesy and caution increase safety and reduce the death toll during a period of four weeks, a better record for all months should be the result.

Women in Industry.

It is appropriate on Labor Day to glance forward and backward upon the status of women and children in industry. This year an unprecedented advance can be recorded in the elimination of child labor and the abolition of sweatshops. But there is still much to be done by the States before entirely satisfactory working conditions for women can be assured.

It may be assumed that some of the progress relating to child labor and sweatshop conditions accomplished under the National Recovery act will be permanent. The safeguards set up by the States, however, are the only permanently reliable means of preventing abuses in these fields. Mary Anderson, director of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor, points out this fact in an interesting review of what has been achieved up to date. No doubts can be entertained as to the validity of minimum-wage laws of the States. They have full power, also, to fix hours and conditions of work. During this year seven States have enacted minimum-wage laws for women, making 16 States in all which have legislated on this subject.

There is need of uniformity in State legislation, for the sake of maintaining fair competitive conditions. Only seven States and the District of Columbia have limited women's work to 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week. Some States permit much longer hours, and four States have not legislated on the subject. Thus industries in States which limit women's hours of work are placed at a disadvantage in competing with the output of States where no restrictions are imposed.

Tobacco Markets Closed.

North and South Carolina have both declared a tobacco marketing holiday for an indefinite period until more advantageous sales are assured. This action follows proclamation by the Governors asking all tobacco warehouses to suspend operations until plans to raise prices can be completed. The action is avowedly taken without sanction of law, but general cooperation by warehousemen, it is believed, will assure complete suspension of market operations.

Meanwhile a representative committee of tobacco raisers from several States will visit Washington to enlist the aid of the Federal Government. Secretary Wallace announces that plans are being worked out for a production adjustment plan for next year's crop of flue-cured tobacco, grown principally in Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia.

Closing of the tobacco markets will suspend temporarily, at least, the income from the crop that is looked to for quick money for the planters every fall, but nevertheless mass meetings at various points have supported the warehouse closings, claiming that the prices paid on the auction markets are ruinous. Virginia and the Carolinas raise the greater part of the tobacco used in cigarette manufacture.

Prices so far this year have averaged from 10 to 12 cents a pound, with the planters now demanding that the price be raised to 20 cents. Tobacco is sold by the planters directly to representatives of the big companies. A grower hauls his load of leaf to a market warehouse and there, dumped upon the floor, it is sold to the highest bidder. The planter can refuse a bid, but he has practically no other market for his crop. The Agricultural Department plan for relief contemplates a processing tax which will raise $10,000,000 and provide cash payments to individual growers who participate in the adjustment program.

Another River Tube.

Adequate transportation facilities in New York City and communication to and from the island of Manhattan form one of the great problems of the metropolis. The announcement that arrangements have been completed for the construction of the midtown tunnel under the Hudson River to connect with the New Jersey shore at Weehawken has been received with rejoicing by Gothamites.

The Holland tube and the George Washington bridge have greatly relieved the old-time ferry congestion, but by the time the new tunnel is completed, four years hence, it is believed that its added facilities will be urgently needed. Until the slump of the last few years every addition to New York's means of transportation was no sooner opened than it appeared to be as crowded with passengers as the old system had been without it.

The new Hudson tube will cross from the New York side at Thirty-ninth street, the entrance being located between Ninth and Tenth avenues and made accessible to six crosstown streets by a new street which will run north and south between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second streets.

The need for the new tunnel is shown by the increase of vehicular travel between Manhattan and New Jersey, notwithstanding the depression. The cross-river traffic which six years ago counted more than 15,000,000 vehicles annually, reached a total nearly twice as great last year. The Holland Tunnel earned $2,600,000 in 1932 from the passage of 12,000,000 vehicles.

The new tube also is expected to be self-liquidating through the collection of tolls. Its start at this time is made possible by the loan of $37,500,000 obtained by the Port of New York Authority from the Federal Public Works Administration. The entire cost of the tunnel will be $75,000,000. Work is to begin at once and will furnish jobs for 1,500 unemployed, with the eventual needs of 8,000 workers who will be kept busy for four years.

American Aviation Excels.

In comparison with the growth of aviation in the United States the rest of the world seems to be standing still. The size of this country, its large homogeneous population, and the absence of restrictions, such as numerous European nations impose upon international flying, account in large part for the more rapid growth of aviation in this country. It is claimed by some enthusiasts that Americans are more air-minded than Europeans, but this claim, when analyzed, seems to be explained by the fact that Americans ordinarily are more liberal spenders than Europeans.

About 48,000,000 miles were flown by commercial planes in the United States last year, and this year the increase is expected to be nearly 50 per cent. All of Europe's commercial lines registered less than 35,000,000 miles. Flying is less expensive here than abroad, and rates are decreasing, having dropped from 12 cents a mile in 1928 to an average of about 7 cents in 1933. Speed frequently is greater in the United States, planes are more commodious and comfortable, and, taking the country as a whole, airport accommodations are better.

W. B. Courtney, who made a survey of European fields for Collier's, states that most of the passenger flying abroad is American patronage. He reports that lighted airways are a rarity in Europe and that night flying is practically unknown.

All this, of course, is a comparison in general between aviation facilities of Europe and those of our own country. If one compares the best flying fields and air accommodations of Europe with leading American airports, it would be difficult to decide which are superior. And it should be remembered that in one respect European air progress is far ahead of our own. European capitals have air terminals among the finest in the world, while Washington carries on with a flying field that is a disgrace by contrast.

The air mail is a fixture in the United States, and its business is rapidly growing, with steadily increasing certainty of prompt delivery. In Europe it is an insignificant business.

The enterprise of California in aviation acts as a spur to the industry throughout the country. The great distance to the Pacific Coast now means little to air passengers, and Californians in rapidly increasing number employ the plane for eastward travel. California has more planes and more pilots than any other State, and some of its airports are models of modern service to travelers.

The New York Sun.

On September 3, 1833, the Sun inaugurated the first successful attempt to publish a penny newspaper in New York City. In the hundred years that have passed since that date probably no publication has been more useful.

The Sun has always been more than a purveyor of news. Under Charles A. Dana it was the great example of personal journalism and his influence stamped the character of the Sun for many years. Under the Munsey regime the paper encountered difficulties, as did various other New York dailies during that period. Its rebirth as an evening newspaper may have circumscribed its field as a national newspaper, but the Sun today is a hearty young centenarian. Its one-hundredth birthday edition is a fine example of modern newspaper excellence.

Representative Beck predicts that the Constitution will disappear in 50 years, but some other people are pessimistic.

Aviators are protesting against a code, but still they want to be protected against the downward spiral.

If everybody would remember that Americans all belong to the Union it might help some.

Speaking of codes, it is reported that Henry Ford is about to bring out a new model.

Secretary Wallace gives notice that the new pig deal must not be turned into a pork barrel.

Every boost in the price of gasoline causes the boys to drive fewer miles per gal.

"The Wet Parade."

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The more than 2-to-1 wet victory in the State of Washington, notwithstanding the advantage of the drys in the vote by districts instead of by the State-at-large, brings the "parade of wet States" that have acted on the repeal amendment to 24, just half of the 48 States entitled to act on it. This places the wets within only 12 additional States which they must carry to put the twenty-first amendment in the Constitution, while the drys, who have lost 24 States, must now carry 13 States, more than half of the remaining States yet to vote on the question, if they are to keep the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution.

This showing now seems to make inevitable a termination of the fight over national prohibition which not more than two years ago was regarded as impossible by both the advocates and the opponents of the eighteenth amendment. How swift and sweeping has been the tide against that amendment is indicated by these percentages of the wet strength in the conventions thus authorized:

Vermont will elect delegates to its convention on September 5, followed by Maine on September 11. In the latter State provision has been made by law for something different from the other State conventions—a "deliberative convention." No designation of the position of candidates for delegate will appear on the ballot. The voter will be expected, in theory at least, to choose the candidate he thinks will reach the wisest decision on the basis of the arguments presented at the convention. However, the Maine convention will meet on December 6, by which time it is highly probable that the twenty-first amendment will have been ratified by the necessary 36 States.

Ah, Ha!—A CHISELER!

The Once Over.

By H. I. Phillips.

A BUSINESS MAN GOES INTO THE STRATOSPHERE WITH GEN. JOHNSON.

"Where are we now, general?"

"We're up 5 miles."

"Can you see much?"

"No, but I can still hear some Americans squawking."

"What's that over our heads at approximately the 6-mile level?"

"That's an old-time Republican industrialist."

"How'd he get up that high in the air?"

* * * *

"We must be getting up very high now."

"Where's the old 1929 stock market level?"

"We won't see that at all."

"Why not?"

"We're only going up 10 miles!"

"Lissen, general, are you sure it's safe for us to be this far away from the earth?"

"The farther you get from the earth in its present condition the safer you are."

"But we've got to come down ultimately, haven't we, general?"

"I think so, but the Brain Trust says not. The present plan is to get into the stratosphere and see if we can't pull the earth up to our level."

"How can we pull the earth up to a level 10 miles above it?"

"All we need is cooperation."

"That sounds silly."

"If that sounds silly you ought to hear some of the other ideas advanced these days for business recovery."

"But suppose all the people fail to cooperate and some of them quit and come down to earth ahead of time?"

"They can't come down ahead of time without a permit."

"What goes up must come down, general."

"That's only true under the Republicans."

"But what about the law of gravitation?"

"We've suspended that."

COWBOYS AGAIN.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes has revoked the orders of two of his predecessors and has directed that hundreds of thousands of acres of the public domain in Arizona and New Mexico, illegally fenced in for many years by cattle interests, be thrown open for public grazing.

It is quickly apparent that cowboys will be needed in this latest aspect of the administration's new deal, observes the Manchester Union. Grazing lands long held by private interests will again be opened, the storied range is again to be free, and the cowboy is to ride as he used to ride.

In Secretary Ickes' businesslike announcement, therefore, is material both colorful and romantic. Readers of fiction also are to have a new deal, and so are motion-picture patrons, for it is not too much to suppose that developments will lend themselves to embroidery. As things are now, the most publicized of the Nation's cowboys are in Hollywood, with only a relatively few of the dyed-in-the-wool variety still carrying on with lariat and branding iron. The former will be put to keen competition when the barbed wire is cut, for it begins to look as if the vivid days of the past are to have a twentieth century revival.

The Hill Billy Sees No Fault in Snuff If the Preacher Uses It

By Robert Quillen.

ANN HARDING is a beautiful woman. Her reputation as an actress was made by playing parts that revealed her true character—that of a cultivated gentlewoman blessed with common sense.

Like Ruth Chatterton, she set a standard for girls of native good taste; and many of them—perhaps many thousands—saw in her their ideal of womanhood, without fault and above reproach.

Playing the role of ideal is always a dangerous business. To the "movie fan" a well-loved actress becomes so familiar that her identity never is lost in the part she plays. Ann Harding as Cleopatra is merely Ann Harding in strange garments. And the girls who adore her forget that she is playing a part and see her only as herself, doing right because she is that kind of woman.

What, then, if she does wrong? Will they not think the wrong right because so fine a woman does it?

In a recent picture, played with William Powell, she plays the part of an attractive but uncourted older sister who determines to get a husband by such means as may be necessary.

She selects her man, makes herself at home in his apartment, and arranges for her old-fashioned father to catch her there. The man is a "good sport" and agrees to marry her.

It is a trick as old as human depravity, and the sequel, however nicely camouflaged, is simply a "shotgun wedding."

It isn't a vulgar or sordid or wicked picture. As a matter of fact, it is delightful and amusing entertainment. Everybody leaves the theater chuckling. And the chief characters are portrayed as the well-bred and charming kind of people you would like to know.

That is the fly in the ointment. For the picture asserts, as clearly as anything can be asserted, that a girl in pursuit of a man does no wrong if she lives with him for months in order to win him as a husband.

Perhaps few girls will be ruined by the picture, but isn't one too many?

The ability of the movies to inspire imitation is established beyond question. If they must set an example of this kind, let them at least give the role to some wanton who serves as an ideal only for the foolish and depraved.

Comment of the Press

Not a Federal Job.

Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The proposal of Mr. Malloy, Assistant Attorney General, for uniting the police forces of the country into a vast law-enforcement machine under Federal control is impracticable on its face. It illustrates the increasing attempt to extend the Federal authority and relieve the States and local communities from their natural responsibilities and duties.

Mr. Malloy's proposed set-up, involving Federal commissioning and control of sheriffs, policemen and town constables, would be too unwieldy. Even compact little England, which boasts of its ability to keep crime under control, has attempted no such ambitious scheme.

The State police systems in this country, originating in Pennsylvania, have proved so admirably efficient as to suggest that the ideal solution would be their expansion to include the cities and towns of their respective Commonwealths.

Mr. Darrow Again at Bat.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Back in his old home town in Ohio, which made his visit a gala occasion, Clarence Darrow talked about economics. He can't see how we're going to retrieve prosperity by curtailing production. He thinks it an "utter absurdity" to pay a farmer for growing less wheat and a planter for reducing his cotton acreage. "The world," he says, "won't have too much until no one is starving, no one is in want." We can all say amen to that last sentence.

How we are going to beat back to plenty by restricting production is a paradox that baffles most of us, just as it does Mr. Darrow. "It's a mad world, my masters," as well as a sad one. So many dogmas that were handed down to us and accepted as eternal verities have been bashed in the head that, generally speaking, homo sapiens is out on a limb.

Deluge Coming.

New York Herald-Tribune.

By September 19 31 States will have gone for repeal—unless some unexpected reversal of opinion occurs. The arrival of the remaining five needed to make the 36 can hardly be delayed long. Virginia and Florida, the two States voting in October, should bring the total up to 33. Then on November 7 comes the deluge, with five States voting.

When Pigs Go to Market.

Kansas City Times.

The number of little pigs that have gone to market in the last three days, under the Government's plan to reduce the visible supply of swine and raise the price of pork, may have left the officials of the Kansas City stockyards with the impression that, despite the nursery rhyme, no little pig could possibly have stayed at home. But the fact is that, although more than 300,000 pigs have been received at the six centers designated in the plan since the Government began to offer bonuses for them, this particular venture in creating wealth by destroying property has only just begun.

Farm Relief.

As for reducing any remaining wheat surplus, the 200 men who were consumers of 2,300 hot cakes at one C. C. C. forest camp breakfast can honestly say, "We eat our part."

By Edgar A. Guest.

We Do Our Part.

"We do our part!" The sign is on the wall.
I'd like it better thus: "We do our all!"
Who sees another faltering on the road
Needs not the inspiration of a code.

His heart should prompt him, if he be a man,
To do his utmost swiftly as he can.
Not now the time of self too much to think.
All hands go down when storm-tossed vessels sink.

"We do our part!" The President desires
No more, but who should rest before he tires?
'Tis not the time to measure to the yard
Our length of service, for our tasks are hard.

Not "this much and no more!" will suit the need.
This is no day to think in terms of greed.
"We do our part!" Repeat the slogan o'er

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

DEAR ALEX: It's good to hear from you again after so long a time. But you are still asking the silliest questions, Alec. You want to know now if there is really any such affection between Mr. Roosevelt and Prof. Moley as would warrant the professor running up and down the banks of the Hudson River to keep telling the President good-by.

Bargeron.

I'll declare, Alec, I believe you are the most naive person I have ever known. You are referring, of course, to the fact that it seemed that the professor would never get over telling the President good-by; that he first journeyed to Hyde Park to tell him good-by and lo and behold, who should be in the party as the President boarded the Vincent Astor yacht a few days later at Poughkeepsie but the professor, telling him good-by again.

I'll admit, Alec, that it seemed like a wholesale of good-bys. But you should not be so unworldly, Alec, as to think that this means an unusual affection between the two men. After all, Alec, Mr. Roosevelt wasn't leaving on any trip around the world, from which he might not return. He was just coming to Washington.

* * * *

What is true, Alec, is that the professor is going on a long trip. He is going out into the world to seek his career in the magazine business. It is he, Alec, who is embarking upon a venturesome trip.

And you should know, Alec, that the business of telling a President good-by is a highly-organized business, that it is permitted only to those on whom he wants to bestow his trademark. The series of good-bys between Mr. Roosevelt and the professor was an organized deliberate thing. The professor had said good-by at Hyde Park a few days ago but now the arrangements were being made for the President to board the yacht at Poughkeepsie. Now this is not just a matter of his going and getting on the boat. For one thing, it must be arranged who will be permitted to tell him good-by while the camera and newspaper boys look on. Because this is the bestowal of an accolade. In this country the King doesn't receive at court. He permits the favored to be photographed with him.

* * * *

Well, it was undoubtedly reasoned in this intance that the professor had taken pretty much of a wallop and that now that he was cutting loose on his own, that there should be a definite ceremony of his "closeness to the President." You see, Alec, the professor intends still to write his syndicate pieces and the interest in those pieces would be very small, indeed, unless the reader is to believe that the professor is "close to the President." This is the professor's selling point, Alec.

Well, I supposed it occurred to somebody that the professor's "closeness to the President" had not been sufficiently emphasized by the "Dear Raymond" letter which the President wrote him, or in their earlier exchange of good-bys at Hyde Park.

The thing to do was to record it in camera. I suppose, Alec, that there is hardly a paper of any size in the country that in the past day or so has not carried a photograph of the President's leaving Poughkeepsie with the professor there telling him good-by.

News stories of the event tell, too, that just before the gangplank was lifted that the President and professor were seen conversing off to the side. Well, now, Alec, try to tell anybody who saw those photographs or who read those stories that the professor is not close to the President!

A vast enterprise is engaged in developing these impressions. Newspapers send high-salaried reporters and photographers with the President for the purpose.

A similar accolade was bestowed on Mr. Arthur Mullen, now in the political business here. After his work in the 1932 campaign it was Mr. Mullen's ambition to go in the Cabinet. This could not be. Yet the administration appreciated that it owned Mullen something, so it was agreed that it would give him a good start in the business he intended to pursue.

It was arranged that he should be offered and in turn decline a Federal judgeship. You can't imagine what advertising value this was to Arthur.

It is my belief in the case of the professor, though, Alec, that the camera portrayals put him in a wrong light. The average newspaper reader who takes his camera studies on the fly is likely to have the impression, first from the good-by at Hyde Park and then the good-by at Poughkeepsie, that the professor was running up and down the banks of the Hudson, to see if the yacht would run—you know, Alec, like those people upon the occasion of the first steamboat.

NAVIGATING THE RAPIDS.

In its plan to summarily remove from circulation those several million porkers, the Department of Agriculture is setting out to navigate the most treacherous rapids of the perilous stream which must be won through before national recovery is achieved for the farm, says the Worthington (Minn.) Times. Strewn along the banks are the wreckage of the British rubber control and the Brazilian coffee valorization, which sought to maintain prices for those two raw materials.

There is one element that is dangerous in the extreme. Whenever a price level is reached making anything profitable, everybody goes into the business of turning out the profitable article.

Labor Day's Slow Start May Augur Well for a Later Booming Theater Season

Holiday Finds Local Theater At Lowest Ebb

Only Six Hits on Broadway; Mr. Fetchit Comes Back; Showshop Chatter.

Although theoretically this is the first week of the new theatrical season, actual theater operation, not only in the Capital but in New Yory as well, finds itself at the lowest ebb in months.

In Washington the situation is almost unparalleled for this particular week of the year. With two motion picture houses in the downtown, first-run area dark, one playing a holdover feature and another a return engagement, only three new film attractions beckon the amusement-seeker.

The National, the only legitimate theater of the first rank to keep its lights up last season and apparently the only one to undertake a similar task this year, while it has moved the scheduled opening of the season forward three weeks by the prospective inauguration a week from tonight of Manager Cochran's preliminary season of guest-star revivals, still has nothing with which to beguile the playgoer in search of ways and means to occupy his Labor Day holiday.

The plight of the local theatergoer, however, is no whit worse than confronts the Broadway playfellow. Comparatively, indeed, it is not so bad.

Broadway Play Dearth.

The first week of the new theatrical season in New York finds only six attractions on Broadway. Only one is a musical—the favorite form of holiday entertainment—and that is the long-running "Music in the Air," now in the last fortnight of its engagement.

It is predicted that unless Joe Cook hurries his new production of "Hold Your Horses" into New York, Broadway for the first time in goodness knows when may find itself without a single musical show on the ticket stands. The chances all seem to be against Mr. Cook's rushing his new frolic out of Boston in the face of the resounding hit it scored there on the occasion of its premiere last Wednesday night.

In spite of all these doleful auguries, the outlook for the immediate future is not so gloomy as it might be.

As already suggested, Washington will hit its stride with the opening of the National's season next Monday night, when Corinne Griffith will be seen for the first time on a local stage as star of Noel Coward's "Design for Living," and the cinema situation by that time also largely will have cleared.

That is to say, RKO-Keith's will house a new offering and presumably the reopening dates of both the Rialto and Metropolitan theaters will be more or less definitely known.

Broadway, too, will be looking up—and not necessarily because it is flat on its back and can't look any other way! This is indicated by a budget of random jottings reaching the dramatic desk over a sultry week-end.

Back From the Mines!

Nancy Carroll, for example, has followed in the footsteps of our revered Helen Hayes and has, for the time being, at least, deserted the movies to take her first dramatic role on the stage. She is rehearsing in Leon Gordon's new play, "Undesirable Lady," a title that seems flagrantly inapplicable to the titian and temperamental Miss Carroll.

Actuated by a similar determination, Tallulah Bankhead had progressed sufficiently with the preparation of Owen Davis' new play of the South, "Jezebel," to have made the selection of Robert Wallsten as her leading man, when she was stricken with a sudden illness, which, while pronounced not serious, still is of such acuteness as to defer rehearsals of "Jezebel" for at least another week.

Mr. Wallsten, it comes out, is a graduate of the summer theater, in the propagation of which the East has been so prolific this year, specifically of the Berkshire Players, of Stockbridge, Mass. This would not be Mr. Wallsten's first Broadway appearance, though, since he had roles in "I Loved You Wednesday," and "Foolscap."

Group Theater Busy.

The Group Theater, that comparatively young and unequivocally ambitious offshoot of the Theater Guild, announces "Man in White," a new play by Sidney Kingsley, as its first production of the new season. Alexander Kirkland, who divides his time more or less evenly between the stage and the cinema, has the leading role.

Rachel Crothers' new play, "Talent," with Barbara Robbins and Brian Donlevy heading the cast, is being given a suburban tryout up Cape Cod way before being taken into New York.

When Ben Stein produces the musical satire, "She Had to Be Told," with Lester Allen in the stellar role—this would be in October—we are told that the radio industry will be in for another lusty lampooning. Sammy Timberg wrote the score.

When all these activities get going under their own head of steam, there may be a theatrical season of 1933-34, after all. Too bad it didn't get started in time to help you out with your plans for today!

Speaking of Nancy Carroll, her appearance in "Undesirable Lady" will not mark her first experience with the legitimate theater. Skipping lightly over her days as a coryphee, Miss Nancy identified herself once before with the dramatic stage when she acted as partial "angel" for "Frankie and Johnnie," produced several seasons ago by Jack Kirkland, Miss Carroll's then current husband.

Those Eight Girls.

An echo of The Post-Loew's Fox Theater-Wilson Line steamers contest, recently held to select a local beauty to appear in the Paramount production of "Eight Girls in a Boat," soon to be put in work on the West Coast, reaches the Capital in the form of a wire from Hollywood, to the effect that seven young women from as many American cities arrived safely in the film capital on last Friday to launch their film careers—all in the same picture.

The girls, in addition to Betty Gray, Washington's representative, are Mildred Hollis, New York; Violet Foran, Cleveland; Marie Louise Fisher, Detroit; Eleanor Lovegren, Boston; Adele Pearce, San Francisco, and Vivian Ward, San Diego. The eighth girl is to be chosen from a group of Los Angeles entries.

"Eight Girls in a Boat" will be a Charles R. Rogers production for Paramount release.

This ought to be an elegant spot to compose a mot about the "face that launched a thousand ships," or the ships that launched a thousand faces, or something, if only one had a bent in that direction.

Before setting out for the Earle today, it would be the part of wisdom to consult the film time tables appearing elsewhere on this page. The regular daily schedule has been taken apart and put together again to make room for five de luxe performances, instead of the usual four, the first one beginning at 10:30 a. m.

The Incorrigibles.

There is never any telling what "Topsy and Eva," otherwise Rosetta and Vivian Duncan, are going to do next. Among the greatest of the contemporary stage's artists at the tricky business of ad libbing, they have always been the despair of authors, actors and musical directors who expect their stars to stay at least within gunshot of the script in which they are appearing. But the Duncans just can't be bothered.

As many people as could crowd their way into the Belasco Theater last March 5, when the octogenarian Daniel Frohman, dean of American producers, put on his Inaugural Actors' Fund Benefit, will recall that Vivian and Rosetta stopped one of the greatest shows ever seen in Washington cold in its tracks by the sheer audacity of their rehearsed clowning—and that on a bill that included Noel Coward, Beatrice Lillie, William Faversham, Cecilia Loftus, Fannie Ward, Leo Carillo, Fannie Hurst and scores more in the first flight.

Quick, Watson, My Cap!

Last night the same thing happened at Loew's Fox, where Fire Chief Watson had stopped in to perfect the last of the last minute arrangements for The Post's giant Firemen's Parade Benefit at Jimmie Lake's Gayety Theater last midnight.

In a moment of inadvertence, Chief Watson laid his uniform cap down and turned away momentarily to discharge his errand. Before he could retrieve the headgear, Rosetta Duncan had it on and was out on the stage blowing a whistle for all she was worth and otherwise having the time of her life.

All of which didn't hurt the seat sale for the benefit half as much as it disconcerted the head of the District Fire Department, although it can not be said that he exactly burnt up!

Reference to the Duncan Sisters is a reminder that in case you have wondered where you may have seen Murray Mencher, youngest of the tunesters appearing with the "Song Writers on Parade," headlining the current stage bill at the Earle, it was probably with them—or perhaps with Eddie Cantor or Harry Richman. Murray Mencher has accompanied them all at the piano in many of their Washington appearances. Murray was the chap who wrote, "Ro, Ro, Rolling Along," which Harry Richman sang with great success, and "Making the Best of Each Day," introduced by Eddie Cantor at the Palace Theater, New York, and used throughout the record nine-week run on Broadway. One of his latest is "Under Your Window Tonight." More recently Harry Richman's accompanist has been Jack Golden, for many months conductor of the orchestra at Meyer Davis' old Le Paradis, now the Club Michel.

Howard Returning.

Not unimportant among the vagrant items that find their way into a Labor Day—labor day is correct—column like this is the one which says that Leslie Howard, First National star, whose first picture following his European vacation will be "British Agent," will arrive in New York about September 15.

This will be in ample time to see himself in "Captured," the picture which played last week at the Earle and is now on view in the Strand Theater, New York, for an indefinite run.

After he has spent a few days in New York, Howard will depart for Hollywood, expecting to be there, according to latest official reports of his expectations, not later than September 25. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Howard and their daughter.

There has been no week-end vacation for the box-office staff of the National Theater. Russell Thomas, treasurer, and his assistants, it seems, are putting in full-time hours, allotting regular patrons their season reservations and filling and mailing out orders for the three-week season of revivals opening next Monday night. The regular box-office seat sale for Corinne Griffith in "Design for Living" will open Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. A popular scale of what Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran terms "New Deal" prices will prevail.

"Lazy Bones" Himself.

Stepin Fetchit, that languorous sepia comic who flared up so suddenly on the Fox lot and then subsided almost as quickly, has been signed by Educational Pictures for the leading role in the first of its new "Song Hit Stories" series.

This series, an innovation in short-subject entertainment, will present musical dramatizations of song numbers that are currently popular. The first one in which Stepin Fetchit will do his famous impersonation—and this is not strictly an imitation—of the slow-moving Negro, will be based on "Lazy Bones," probably the most widely played and sung tune of the present moment. The picture will be made at the Paramount studio in Astoria, Long Island, under the supervision of Al Christie.

It was about three or four years ago, it will be recalled, that Stepin Fetchit, who had scored in the Fox "Movietone Follies," "The Ghosts Talks," "Hearts in Dixie" and other features, was in Annapolis making "Salute," when he strayed off the reservation and presented himself to acting-manager "Winnie" Winchester of the then Fox Theater and requested an advance of $20.

Being called in to corroborate Mr. Fetchit's identification, this column was instrumental in persuading both Mr. Winchester and Mr. Fetchit that Mr. Fetchit, as an earnest token of his appreciation for all that dough, ought to go on for at least one personal appearance before the Fox audience then assembled. Mr. Fetchit, being in an especially agreeable state of mind at the moment, agreed that that was fair enough.

Since he repeated exactly the song, dance and chatter routine that he had done in the "Movietone Follies," there could no longer be any doubt of Mr. Fetchit's being Mr. Fetchit.

Mr. Fetchit, this graceful gesture ended, invested the larger portion of the $20 in additional consignments of his favorite panther sweat and that was the last ever seen of Mr. Fetchit in these parts!

Afterthoughts.

Afterthoughts on a week-end about the showshops: Newsreels again prolific in interesting personalities and events . . . President Roosevelt reviewing New York troops at Camp Smith . . . William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, boosting the NRA . . . Equipoise romping away with a rich stake race, just to prove that he is a thoroughbred who can take it for seven furlongs and then come on to win in the eighth . . . Helen Wills Moody, not looking too good in her default to Helen Jacobs . . . Sammy Stein diving out of a West Coast wrestling ring to let Jim Browning keep his title after having virtually won . . . Havoc wrought by Washington's hurricane . . . Foreign shots calculated to make America wine conscious, what with repeal in sight and everything. . . . Maybe a theater devoted entirely to newsreels wouldn't be so bad . . . There is a great wallop for the old-timers in the tunes woven into the musical background of "Broadway to Hollywood," at the Palace . . . "Bedelia," "Hiawatha," "Under the Bamboo Tree," "Rosie," "Bicycle Built for Two," "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" and the rest . . . And there's a catch in the throat when Lillian Russell's picture gazes back at you across the desk of an imitation Joe Weber that doesn't look any more like Joe Weber than you do . . . Incidentally, the Fay Templeton, Lillian Russell, Weber and Fields and the other members of the old Weber and Fields company are impersonations, even in the cases of those still living . . . And that is not Julian Mitchell, the stage manager, whom you see, either . . . It is Willard Mack, doing just that brief bit in the picture which he wrote with Edgar Allen Woolf and personally directed . . . Freddie Clark's revamped orchestra at the Earle is the best over which he has waved a baton since moving from Fifteenth street to Thirteenth . . . In one of the first violin chairs will be recognized Sigmund Ziebel, former concertmaster at the Metropolitan and later at the Fox . . . With Ziebel, Daniel Breeskin and Alex Podnos in it, the Earle has one of the strongest first string sections in town . . . Gracie Barrie was a happy thought as substitute for Maxine Doyle during the period of her six-week vacation . . . Gracie, however, hasn't quite got accustomed to the announcing part of her job yet . . . But that will come . . . And so will the end of this.

By the way, what ever became of jigsaw puzzles?

Stock High in Local Market

The blonde and buoyant Joan Blondell, who, true to prediction, takes on new stature as a comedienne by virtue of her excellent work with Warren William, Genevieve Tobin and Hugh Herbert in the screen version of "Goodbye Again," current at the Earle. The picture was photographed by Miss Blondell's husband, George Barnes, who lensed her eyes to look as big and soulful as Bette Davis' or Joan Crawford's!

Glen Echo Park

Big doings over the week-end at Glen Echo Park, the first two days of the big three-day celebration over Labor Day, the last summer holiday of the season. Week-end crowds flocked to the resort, and enjoyed the cooling waters of the Crystal Pool, which proved a great antidote for hot weather.

Of course, many of them stayed longer than usual on the big coaster dips and airplane swings, the carrousel and all the other amusements, anxious to get all the fun possible before the park closes for good next Sunday night.

But today again Glen Echo is in full swing and a great crowd of merrymakers is expected. Everything, including the dancing in the Spanish Garden, air-cooled ballroom, beckons the Labor Day vacationists.

Picnic grounds are all set to take care of entire families in the grand manner.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-mark Applied For)

By Morgan Baker

THE balloting is ended. As soon as a recheck of votes can be made, the winners of the all-expense tours to Chicago and other prizes will be announced.

BAKER.

The race was unusually close in the women's division with Miss Beulah Myles, Veterans Administration, and Miss Janet Stevens, Agriculture, alternating throughout the contest for first place in the women's division. Even at the close last night, there was no indication definitely of the winner.

Treat for All Nominees.

Now, here is a treat for all nominees participating in the popularity contest from the beginning, August 13.

The Washington Post's Federal Diary will be host to all nominees and their escorts at a gala party when the prizes will be formally presented to the winners. The affair will include a banquet and ball at one of Washington's finest clubs. Details will appear tomorrow morning in this column.

ATTACKING the injustices of the Government worker in the economy act, Luther C. Steward last night struck the keynote in a radio address on the eve of the convention of the National Federation of Federal Employes at Kansas City.

Mr. Steward, president of the federation, emphasized that the problems of the Federal employes are the problems of the whole people. He stressed the need for legislation to correct the inequities in the furlough system and to end sweatshop practices in some Government offices.

Today delegates from all parts of the country will open their twelfth annual convention and consider a great array of questions affecting the welfare of the Federal employe.

"Within the past year Federal employes have been through a trying period," Mr. Steward declared. "Although their wages always have lagged behind wages in private enterprise, they have accepted pay cuts, furloughs, and curtailments in many conditions with a fine and sincere patriotism which always will shine in their honor.

Constructive Program.

"Our convention will endeavor to meet the problems created by the so-called 'economy' legislation with a constructive program; a program which will do justice to the workers, to the public and to the Government itself.

"The Federal Government has relinquished its place as a model for private enterprise and in emasculating its service structure it has turned the hands of the clock backward.

"Furthermore," Mr. Steward continued, "the whole so-called 'economy' program is completely out of keeping with the Federal Government's present valiant efforts to lead private enterprise out of the pathway of deflation. The Federal Government, itself, should change its own policies so that it may wear the NRA badge of honor.

Deplores Spoils System.

Touching on the merit system, Mr. Steward declared that "events of recent months have brought from the rank and file of citizenry throughout the land emphatic evidences of disgust with the spoils system and demands that the civil service system be maintained and extended."

"The spoils system is an ugly system," Mr. Steward went on. "It has no regard for efficiency, economy, experience, training or education. Under it one need have but one qualification; that of being 'deserving' in the eyes of this or that political party.

"The American people again, and this time with great vigor, have declared their faith in the civil service system. They have said that they want no further raids upon it; that they believe the best interests of the whole Nation are served by rigidly faithful adherence to that personnel program which recognizes only merit."

Approximately 500 local unions of the National Federation are represented at the convention which will remain in session until a definite program is adopted, covering all questions.

Howard H. Orr has been transferred to Veterans Administration Facility office at Dayton, Ohio.

Hunt for Low Prices, Ogburn Warns Buyers

Deal With NRA Places, But Fight Cost Boost Is Professor's Advice.

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Buy from Blue Eagle stores if you can, but buy only at the lowest prices for the same quality, was the advice given today by Prof. William F. Ogburn, formerly director of the Consumers' Advisory Board of the NRA, who quit the job recently after dissension.

If prices rise faster than purchasing power, "there will be another economic catastrophe," he said before the City Club of Chicago. "The tendency is for prices to rise faster. It is easier to mark up prices than to mark up wages, hence it is the consumer's moral duty to watch prices closely and keep them down.

"It is not enough to buy from NRA establishments; it will be just as patriotic to spend time in investigating prices and buy at the best price."

Prof. Ogburn said there was "no doubt that the New Deal is weakening the forces of competition which keep prices down." He suggested that charts be published in newspapers showing price statistics to protect the consumer and that local committees be formed to study prices and report to consumers.

Bostonian Easy Victor in Fray With Policemen

Unjustly Carried Into Court, Insists Upon Right to Be Carried Out Again.

A radical-minded Bostonian was arrested in the early nineteenth century for soap-boxing in the public square. When told that he must go to court, he flatly refused to go unless carried. He was a heavy man, and two burly policemen had considerable difficulty in transporting him to the hall of justice.

At the court he was pronounced, "not guilty." "Very well," he said, "you have carried me here against my will, now you must carry me back."

There was much puffing and panting on the part of the constables before their stubborn charge was deposited in the square once more. Here he adjusted his cravat, brushed the dust from his coat and remarked with pious dignity, "I am more fortunate than was our Savior. He had only one jackass to carry Him, whereas I have two."

Hill-Wenger.

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—Miss Elizabeth Gentry Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Hill, of the university, and Mr. Clarence Windom Wagner, of Leedstown, Va., were married Friday afternoon at the bride's home, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers, pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

Radio Waves and Ripples

HERLUF PROVENSON, assistant manager of local N. B. C. operations and one of the best-known executives in this area, is leaving Washington, or at least that's the way we had it last night from a mysterious voice on the other end of a tapped wire.

The phantom speaker also said Provenson would join an important station in Pennsylvania. He further added that the story, in all probability, would be denied tomorrow, and then after a day or so, "it would come out."

Washington regrets to see Herluf Provenson go. An efficient executive, an excellent gentleman and good fellow.

Percy Patrick Posey, animal and bird imitator the Columbia station officials so ingeniously hired to scream over its mikes as it subscribed to the NRA broadcasting code, is very sick-a-bed from flu in the Alexandria Hospital.

We wish you a speedy recovery, Percy Patrick Posey. As an imitator, you have no peer. Get back on your feet and back on the air. That Blue Eagle's just got to go on. Incidentally, all who heard his magnificent scream the other evening, drop Percy a line at his sick-bed establishment. You know how those things help, when the world looks so dark and gray—mostly dark.

Emery Dougherty, one of the better local bands (because of himself and Gay Schaeffer, among others) went back on the air last evening via the red network NBC and did the return in good manner. For a tenor this season, the band has a former jockey, Ray Beck. OK., Ray, we hope these waves are no harder to ride than the horses. And remember, just because you're away from the tracks, don't think you're through with dopes. You find 'em running radio columns, even.

Maj. John S. Cohen, editor of the Atlanta Journal (for which we ran down many a police story, good and bad, in our day), is stepping his WSB to 50,000 watts this Saturday.

From 8 to 9 p. m. the NBC will make merry christening the bigger plant. On the program as announcers will be Graham McNamee, Milton J. Cross, Phil Carlin, Sen Kaney, Bill Hay and Gene Rouse.

Lambin Kay, Brooklyn boy with that terrific Southern accent, will be master of ceremonies. Kay was one of the first radio announcers. He was talking in one in 1922, or thereabouts.

The entertainers will include Jimmie Melton, the Revelers, Pickens Sisters, Vaugh de Leath, Billy Jones and Ernie Hare, Johnny Marvin, Molasses and January, Borah Minnevitch and His Rascals, Joe Parsons, Vic and Sade, Gene and Glenn, Ben Bernie, Vincent Lopez and the NBC Concert Orchestra.

The speakers—Major Cohen, Merlin Hall Aylesworth, Judge E. O. Sykes and Niles Trammel.

From the reviewing stand of the National Firemen's Labor Day parade, NBC will describe to the country this biggest of all firefighters' pageants. As speakers, the broadcast will include George S. Dern, Secretary of War; Homer Cummings, Attorney General; Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce; Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Fire Chief George S. Watson, District Commissioners and Sergt. A. J. Bargagni.

Labor Day speeches are on the air today. If you feel a yearning for such, turn on the set and swing the dial right or left, with gentleness or savageness, and you're bound to run onto one of the leading men or women of the Nation, telling you how great is work of the laborer. Throughout the land, bands will be playing, automobiles running, paraders parading, people faiting, others getting drunk, some swimming, some picnicing, a few getting killed and others dying of old age. The great American scene on Labor Day! What you don't see yourself, or hear over the waves during the day, the news broadcasts will bring you tonight.

Waves.

Listen for Gladys Rice's excellent rendition of the old Helen Morgan tune—"Bill," when she gets going Thursday night, WJSV.

Who Department.

Who is the man that keeps calling in those items about his girl friend, a couple of which are good?

Those interested in the Federal Farm Credit Administration—listen to Henry Morgenthau, jr., C. B. S., Thursday, 4:45 to 5 p. m. It originates at WJSV.

Completing their first vacation in three years of broadcasting, those gossipy soap-and-suds girls of the air, Clara, Lu 'n' Em, start it up again this morning, N. B. C.

With Pauline Frederick, of the stage and screen, working with Ben Bernie Tuesday night, don't be surprised to hear Dr. Cannon doing a two-act with one of the boys from Lost City Mountaineers.

Beginning next Sunday, listen for Schnozzle Durante and Ruth Etting on the Chase & Sanborn hour. They're succeeding Bert Lahr until Eddie Cantor gets back.

Just to show what that touch of saneness (if applied right) will do for a spoofing program, witness Irvin S. Cobb's fan mail after his recent tribute to the troupers. Cantor did it once, and his free paper jumped like a Washington thermometer.

After several harried weeks of busting about the big towns and the tankers, the Warings are taking a little time off (but not the air) in New York. Just a quiet little spot, after all those days in the sticks, eh, Barney McDevitt, you old press agent.

A good-natured feud about fan mail is going on between Stephen Fox and Ray Collins, of CBS dramatic staff. You know how that matinee idol stuff goes, and what it does to strong men.

Vera Van practices her songs in a Madison avenue restaurant while waiting for the waiter to bring on the soup. Well, anyhoo, Vera, that's better than with the soup.

Don't even miss Sigmund Spaeth

Two Leafs from the radio album, upper left, Ann and Esther, both accomplished organists for C. B. S. Upper right, insert, Phil Harris, that young musical man from California, who will brighten the darkest night with his melodies. Lower, Lum and Abner, or really, Chester Lauck, and Norris Goff, who come to you daily, excepting Saturday and Sunday, via Mr. National's wirework.

Mild Bleach Will Dispose Of That Tan

By Ruth Anne Davis.

As she wandered leisurely down the Avenue, window shopping as she went along, it occurred to her that none of those deep, dusky blues and stormy grays of the fall frocks were meant for her. She had basked in the summer sun from June until September, so that now her skin was a pagan bronze.

But she was a spirited miss and denied the thralldom of sun tan. She would wear the fall colors, and, not only that, she would wear them well.

First she called up an F street store and ordered a jar of cleansing cream with mild bleaching powers. Night after night she applied it, day after day her skin became lighter. Blues, grays, pansies and wine reds hold no terrors for her now.

Frocks are not alone in catering to feminine curves these days. The little round razor especially designed for milady's use adapts itself in a highly satisfactory way. It does its work well and, unless coerced, refuses to cut and slash the skin surface. Due to milady's inefficiency along shaving lines she should immediately take advantage of this little helpmeet.

If your hostess happens to be particularly addicted to antiques, you might send her a most appropriate box of candy. A Twelfth street candy store fixes assorted bits of sweetness in an old-fashioned colonial crinoline box.

Watches are shockingly modern. If you don't believe it, stop by an F street jeweler and see the watch on display there, which isn't only waterproof but shockproof as well. It's a small plain chromium lady's watch, ideally adapted for rough, tough and ready sportswear. You'll like the watch and you'll like its price.

With winter in the offing and the wine cellar well stocked, you might give a thought to long cozy evenings in front of the open fireplace.

Ordinarily speaking, they don't need much embellishment. A plate of cake, a glass of wine, and thou beside me on a low divan—and all that sort of thing. But there is an interesting little something you might like to consider. You'll find it in an E street novelty shop and recognize it as a small, old-fashioned-looking charred keg, on a wooden tray, with bright brass handles. Around the edges of the tray are niches for the little brass cups. It has an atmosphere all of its own, which it takes wherever it goes.

This bath brush is an excellent back brush. It enables one to dispense with vain gropings and terrific struggles to reach just here and there along the spinal column. The bristles are stiff and stimulating and its weight is light enough for easy handling. You can buy it with plain or pastel handles in an F street store for 58 cents.

And while we're on the subject of the bath, here's some good news about a bathroom bottle set. If you've never had one, you won't know how handy they are, but if you know, you'll realize the bargain flavor to this offer. Four bottle-like jars, labeled to hold lotion, astringent, mouth wash and witch hazel, plus four cakes of very good soap, on sale in a downtown store for 25 cents. It's quite reduced, you'll agree.

Every hostess has (once or twice if she's lucky; oftener if she isn't) experienced the humiliation of pouring her guest's tea and had a goodly quantity of tea leaves deposit themselves in the cup, or else clog the spout and cause awkward overflowing of the tea all over the cloth, or dresses of those present. An ingenious device now on the market readily takes care of and prevents such a catastrope. It's a tea strainer made to fit over the spout of your teapot. If you have a lovely teapot with the tip end broken, fit the strainer over this and no one will ever know.

Again the luxury of the bath is being attended to. A downtown store is displaying the nonskidable, washable bathroom mats, with downy fabric tops and rubber undersides. They're just long enough, just wide enough, and priced exactly right. Take your choice of orchid, green, blue or rose, for 59 cents.

You wouldn't deliberately pass a bargain by without at least stopping for a kindly look, would you? And no use pleading nearsightedness here, for we'll tell you the store and the exact location. First of all you want to know what? A box of very good face powder with a small bottle of perfume, the pair, 98 cents. Here are two presents for the price of one.

Far Away Places Call Again and Noted Washington Woman Explorer Sets Sail

Mrs. Adams Leaves for New Venture Into Old World Archives.

Another quest for buried lore in unfrequented deserts, islands and Old World archives is in the offing as Mrs. Harriet Chalmers Adams, of Washington, probably America's greatest woman geographer, sails tomorrow from Jersey City, bound for Mediterranean points on the S. S. Excalibur.

Over teacups in a farewell chat last week at the Mayflower, her brown eyes sparkled as she discussed her itinerary with the naivette of a schoolgirl embarking on her first voyage.

"I think I shall stay up all night to be sure and catch that first glimpse of Cape St. Vincent," she confided. "This first sight of land holds a permanent lure for me. I always picture the old Portuguese nautical college once there and its founder, Prince Henry, the Navigator, studying fifteenth century maps and directing his great expeditions. So many of them set sail from there for new routes to the Indies. He was one of my early idols.

And Then—Spain!

"And then I shall sight the coast of my beloved Spain and the province Columbus sailed from."

"And further on," she continued, "there'll be the gleaming, white city of Cadiz, where early American explorers embarked. Our first stop will be at Gibraltar. If it's a clear day, we'll see the African coast. Then we'll go on to Palma, Majorca."

Then there will be a day with friends at La Ciatat, a little town out of Marseilles, and at Naples, as usual, she will "make a bee line for Pompeii." When she sails by Messina she will be waving to a friend who lives far out on its northernmost cape.

"I'm always thrilled to see the new things that are happening in Italy nowadays," Mrs. Adams added, "but I'll save most of that to see after Mr. Adams joins me."

Mrs. Adams is the wife of Franklin P. Adams, counselor of the Pan-American Union, who is retiring at the end of this year after 25 years of service during the Union's growth from a one-room office to international importance. He will join Mrs. Adams, probably in Barcelona, Spain, early in January, and together they will visit a number of favorite points, with no definite return date hanging over them.

Damascus and Jerusalem.

"I shall enjoy so seeing Mr. Adams fall in love, as I have, with Damascus and Jerusalem," she said. "He has been there before, but not long enough to really get acquainted."

Far-away places are calling again to Mrs. Harriet Chalmers Adams (top left), Washington explorer, whose hardihood in penetrating unfrequented places of the world has won her a wide reputation. Here are scenes typical of those she already has encountered. Top right shows Mrs. Adams on the Mongolian frontier with natives. Lower left is a scene of the same place, indicating the primitive methods of travel she often has used, and at the bottom she is shown crossing a stream in the Philippines, with Igorot boys, her best means of transportation. Mrs. Adams sails tomorrow on a trip with no itinerary planned in advance, which she expects will take her again to deserts, islands and other world archives.

Her Mediterranean cruise will end at Haifa, in Palestine. For at least a month, then, she plans to rest at a convent, where nuns lodge tourists, right at the top of famed Mount Carmel.

"I'm too old," she smiled, "but if I were younger I'd try to keep house in every country. You can learn more living that way in a week than in six months at a hotel."

There is no trace of the age she alludes to, however, in her dark brown hair, clear skin and diminutive figure. She is no more than 5 feet tall. Only in her bright eyes does one find the answer to that zest for new fields to conquer that has led her into jungles never before penetrated by a white woman.

Born With Wanderlust.

"I was an explorer when I was too young to realize it," she revealed. "My father was a Scotchman with a wanderlust. We lived in California, where I acquired my love of all things Spanish. Father used to leave mother and sister in the civilized home they preferred and take me on horseback on his trips over the entire Sierra Nevada Mountain chain. I've learned since I was the first white child who ever crossed some of those trails."

Her intense interest in Spain and Spanish influences on other lands has taken Mrs. Adams into every country in the world that was ever Spain's. She has visited every South American country, has taken saddle journeys through the Philippines to study the head hunters and Moros there, and has lived much in Spain and the Mediterranean countries that once were rich Spanish provinces.

One year she set sail from Spain and followed the trail of Columbus in the Old and New Worlds. Another year she followed the trails of the Spanish and Portuguese Conquistadores around the world. She was the first woman war correspondent admitted by the French government into front trenches. For 30 years she has been bringing home photographs and movie reels—and she is an expert photographer—and sharing her findings with National Geographic Society and other audiences and readers throughout this country.

Finds "Ignorant" Cultured.

"I long ago ceased to classify as ignorant people who can not read or write," she declared. "In many of the ancient countries the so-called peasants have acquired so much wisdom and culture that has come down to them outside of books. And they have taken time to think. And there's a world to learn of birds and plants and animals from primitive people. No, I've never had any harrowing experiences at their hands. The natives were always kind to me and animals and snakes have a way of slinking off whenever I come around."

"It's such an experience to fly these days, in a day, over some of the places I've taken weeks to travel by land. In the desert, to see the land from above is to really understand it. I learned from air trips in Africa, when I saw those dunes stretch so far from north to south, just whay my caravan journeys had seemed so roundabout.

"I'm glad I've traveled all those other ways, for all their discomforts. There have been mule carts and mountain railways and once an ancient automobile in Morocco, as jerky as an ox cart. Then there have been the strangest sorts of boats and rafts and in the interior of the Philippines one crosses streams in the arms of Igorot boys."

Plans Long-Deferred Writing.

For her present voyage Mrs. Adams has no definite itinerary. She wants to do some special, long-deferred researching in archives of lands bordering the Mediterranean and to write much that has been waiting to be written for 30 years. In addition to Palestine, she expects to visit Transjordania, Syria, Turkey, Jugoslavia, Italy, Austria and, of course, Spain.

Some of her most cherished dreams are wrapped up in the Society of Women Geographers of which she was president for eight years and now is honorary president.

"My dream for the society," she said, "is that it may some day be endowed and have a real home in Washington, among our great buildings, a center for writing members from all points of the world, that it may become in time a world force to help young scientists understudy older ones, and that it may become a great international link between thinking, outstanding women of all nations."

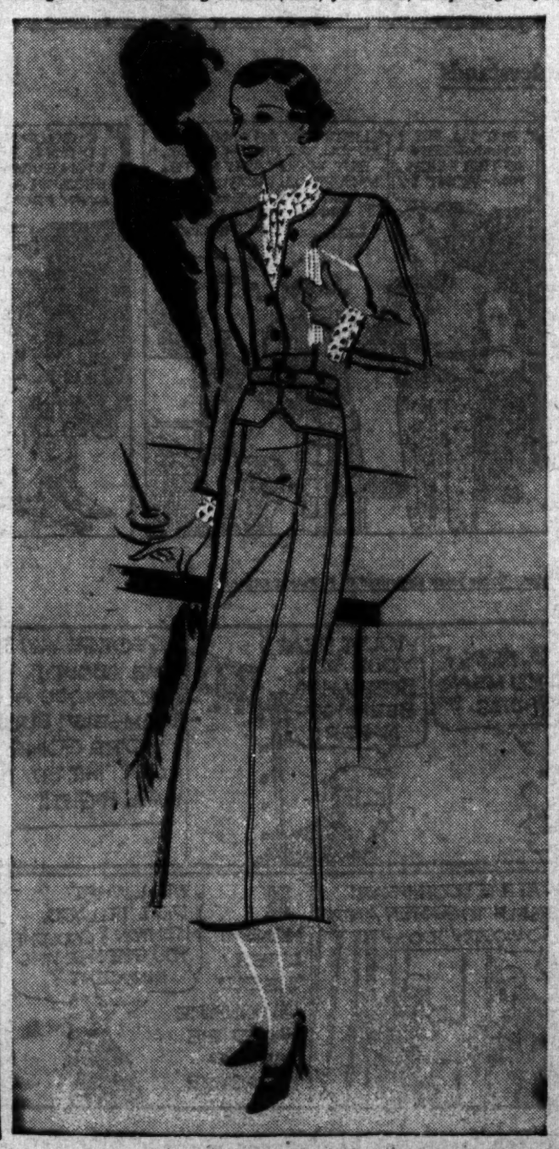
What's in Fashion?

Tailored Dress of Silk or Wool First Choice of Business Woman

Directed by Amos Parrish

It goes without saying that the business woman wants the very slickest of the new dresses for early fall. Whether she's looking for a job or just back from vacation and ready to dig into the job she has. It's a fresh start no matter what . . . and how a fresh dress helps!

We've heard business women talking it over and coming to some exactly right decisions. (For business, you know, is apt to give you as good judgment about clothes as it does about the affairs of your job.) One executive spoke for bengaline. That old-fashioned fabric which is so new for 1933.



Tailored Bengaline.

"I'd like it tailored, of course, and with something white at the neck. You can't get away from it . . . that white neckline on a dark dress suits a business dress to a T. And yet the bengaline will look a little bit dressy and important."

Another who is on the go most of her day proved her point that a soft woolen coat dress would be a big asset. Maybe with a detachable fur collar, so that she could wear it without on warmer days and later under her coat. Such a dress is particularly good-looking in oxford gray, and that's a grand business color.

Rib Knit Wool.

And one young, determined-to-get-there business girl showed that she has the right idea in picking one of the new tailored rib knits. You see it in the sketch—simple and dark, with bright tie-silk setting it off at the neck and sleeves, and giving the effect of a two-piece dress. Thrifty, too—for she can change the cuffs and scarf.

Leaflet on Wardrobes.

With any one of these dresses as a starting point, it's easy to go ahead and plan your complete wardrobe. We've thought of several for different budgets, and have put them all in a new leaflet. Maybe it will save you money—by careful planning and making each costume just as practical as possible. To receive this leaflet, fill in the coupon with the inclosures mentioned.

Mrs. Baker's Visit Recalls War Service

Here to Aid in Community Fund Plans; Humorous Incident Retold.

The presence of Mrs. Newton D. Baker, wife of the former Secretary of War, in Washington this week to take part in the deliberations for the national Community Chest drive, recalls the service Mrs. Baker rendered to her country during the World War. Mr. Baker is chairman of the national drive.

The men in the camps about Washington became restless waiting for their chance to see service overseas. Their ennui was relieved many an evening by the song programs given for them by the wife of the Secretary of War, who sang the patriotic songs in a clear, ringing soprano, favorite songs or those with a dash of humor.

One story of the career of Mrs. Baker as a wartime singer is still remembered in Washington. Mrs. Baker sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" to the accompaniment of the Marine Band at one of the recreational functions arranged for the men, not being aware that before her arrival at the hall Mrs. Logan Phelan, wife of a Marine Corps major general and a former concert singer, had sung exactly the same song.

Hardly had the notes of Mrs. Phelan's voice died away and the men who had been standing at attention for the national anthem relaxed once more and were in their seats than they had to spring up again to listen to Mrs. Baker's rendition of the song.

Mrs. Baker was one of the most enthusiastic of the dancing set of wartime days. She was one of the youngest of the Cabinet women, although, of course, Mrs., William Gibbs McAdoo, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury and daughter of President Wilson, was the very youngest.

Plan Required In Kitchen Care

Daily, Weekly and Monthly Duties Suggested.

The kitchen and pantry will always be shiningly clean and sweetly sanitary if their care is divided into daily, weekly, monthly and seasonal duties.

Daily care should include sweeping and dusting; washing work tables and shelves; washington the floor as it becomes spotted; brushing out the oven and cleaning the surface of the stove; scrubbing the sink, and emptying and washing small garbage can.

Weekly attention should be given gas burners, refrigerator and food containers.

Once a month the walls should be brushed, and special attention given to shelves and cupboards, including replacing of shelf paper, touching up of enameled surfaces, and leaving them open to air after scrubbing thoroughly.

Seasonal care may consist of washing walls, storage shelves and cupboards with an antiseptic solution.

Fireless Cooker Big Aid to Cook

A fireless cooker is of practically inestimable value to the systematic, economical housewife who does her own cooking. Ready-made fireless cookers, while more convenient, easier to keep clean, and less dangerous because more completely insulated, are often out of the price reach of a woman who could, nevertheless, have a home-made one. In making such a cooker, care must be taken in building the insulation, so that the apparatus will not catch fire from heating stones or utensils not properly protected.

Wash Dish Towels Daily; Dry in Sun

Dish towels should be washed at least once a day. Soak them first in cold water, rub with soap and wash thoroughly in hot water. Rinse well, wring dry, stretch smooth and hang evenly—out of doors in the sun if possible. If this is not possible place them on a rack where air and sunlight will reach them. If daily care fails to keep them white, they should be boiled or sent to a commercial laundry every fortnight.

Home-Made Polish Good for Furniture

Equal parts of kettle-boiled linseed oil, turpentine and vinegar make a splendid polish for furniture. With a soft cloth, rub on all the liquid the wood will absorb. With another cloth, wipe off surplus. With a chamois or a soft woolen cloth, rub dry and polish. If it is really rubbed until dry, you will have a rich gleaming surface to which dust will not easily adhere.

Apricots for Bride

Later he drove back out again, towards his Wenatchee ranch, still in overalls, his truck empty, and a fair passenger at his side.

He had bought a marriage license from the proceeds of the apricots, and married Miss Harryetta Lucille Steenman.

Feet.

By Katherine W. Smith.

The thing that's most surprising
When I'm walking down the street
On the people going past me
Are the different kinds of feet.

Some are shod in shoes that dainty
Cinderella might have worn;
Some are pained and gnarled with trudging
And their shoes are old and torn.

So I watch the passing faces
And the feet that match them well,
And both wistful and amusing

The Family Marketer

Stores Closed Today, But Those Leftovers Will Come in Handy.

Here it is Monday and the stores are closed. It will be labor day in the kitchen for housewife unless she has stocked her larder wisely for the lengthy week-end.

The careless old Mother Hubbard who went to the cupboard to get her poor little dog a bone will have nothing on the housekeeper who peers into the refrigerator around noon today hoping her Saturday's marketing still suffices.

If it doesn't, she has three choices. She can dynamite the weekly budget by taking her family out to dinner; she can use leftovers and make something out of practically nothing, or she can do her marketing at a delicatessen.

Beef Ribs Just Right.

The puny-looking remains of what were prime ribs of beef offer a splendid opportunity for a different dish. Strip the bone as bare as possible and chop the meat into fine bits. Add onions, celery and green peppers. Salt and pepper to taste. Put this in a well-greased pan and pour the gravy over it. Take the desolate-looking cold mashed potatoes and blanket the meat mixture with these. Put in oven and bake slowly until warm through. There you are, a unique meat pie!

As for that somewhat ravaged-looking ham, it has untold possibilities. First of all, pick the bone bare. Then beat three eggs with three tablespoons of milk. Add ½ teaspoon of salt, ⅛ teaspoon of pepper and mix together. Add the bits of ham, ground, or chopped finely Cut up any leftover vegetables and add these. Pour into a hot frying pan well covered with grease. Lift the edges of what is now an omelet allowing the thin portions to run underneath. Shake pan gently until egg is set. When brown underneath, fold over and serve on a hot platter.

Delicatessen Is Handy.

As for marketing in a delicatessen, don't let the mere suggestion frighten you. You'll be amazed at the reasonable prices and wide range of selection.

For instance, you can buy a spaghetti dinner for 35 cents. It includes spaghetti, cheese and a hot Italian sauce. You bring the spaghetti to boiling point in three and a half quarts of water. Add two tablespoons of salt. Take spaghetti from water and strain. Add butter, sauce and two-thirds of the cheese. Spread remainder over spaghetti on platter. Be careful of one thing. Don't wash the spaghetti in cold water after straining, as it destroys the flavor.

Other delectable suggestions present themselves in the form of roast chicken, $1.25; roast Virginia ham, sugar cured, 80 cents a pound; roast prime ribs of beef, rare, raw, done, or otherwise, 80 cents a pound.

But That Isn't All.

If all you want is a light meal, why not potato salad at 50 cents a quart. Or a large deviled crab made from fresh crab flakes, 25 cents? Don't confuse this with the small ones which usually sell at 15 cents apiece, or two for 25 cents.

Besides all these palatable items, you can buy cans of soup, peas, asparagus, beans and other vegetables, in some cases as cheaply as you can in less fancy food stores, and in others, for only a cent or two more.

If you have trouble locating any of the above suggestions at the prices stated, call the family marketer right now and she will tell you where to seek.

Planned Meals Cook's Best Bet

Just After Eating Is Worst Time to Think of Them.

Meals planned with reference to other meals are apt to be more interesting, have better food values and more variety at less expense, than those planned hurriedly with references only to disposing of one more meal.

Just after eating is the worst possible time to plan meals. Dinners planned just after breakfast are likely to reflect the attitude that "anything will do."

Long, slow cooking is usually required for the less costly foods, therefore meals planned in a hurry usually require more expensive foods, because more quicly prepared. As for the argument often advanced as to the impossibility of planning meals because of frequent unexpected guests, it is a proven fact that it takes less time to rearrange a definite plan than it does to make an entirely new one.

Potash Will Keep Sink Pipes Open

Always use a sink strainer in the sink, and avoid greasy water as you would the plague, if you want your sink to be of the gleaming, quick-draining type. Wipe grease from dishes before immersing them to wash, and always wash the sink in hot, soapy water after each dish-washing. Then rinse with cold water. If the sink becomes stopped, use a solution of potash, which makes soft soap of grease, the usual impediment in drains.

The potash solution is prepared and used as follows: Dissolve a can of potash in two quarts of cold water. Warm the pipes with boiling water. Pour in the potash solution. Let stand for 30 minutes, then pour boiling water down the drain, and rinse well. Be careful to avoid letting the potash touch the hands or wood finish, and do not inhale the fumes of the potash.

Forgetfulness of Self Is Path That Leads to Lasting Charm

Have you lived long enough to learn that many things you have pursued long, intensely and in vain, come to nestle in your breast when you have ceased to seek them? So, sometimes, is it with personal charm.

So long as you make yourself your chief concern—your looks, your popularity, your surroundings, your eminence, your comfort—so long are you apt to miss the full essence of personal worth. That precious intangible something that makes you sought after, admired, loved, remembered, comes principally through self-forgetfulness over long stretches of time.

Cultivate a hobby. Throw yourself into it so completely, in such time as you have to give it, be it minutes or hours of each day, that when you emerge from the occupation you are as one reborn to the world about you.

We All Have Talents.

Within us all are talents and tendencies waiting opportunity to be developed. David Starr Jordan, at the turn of the century, wrote that most of the mental dyspepsia in the world has its origin in unexpressed talents. When you find an unhappy, a fretful, a maladjusted personality, there you may be sure to find one whose environment, or whose indolence, is smothering a God-given necessity for self expression.

And when you find a maladjusted person, you find one whom all the cosmeticians, all the couturiers, all the beauticians in the world can not really beautify.

The basis of beauty is spiritual release. The plainest woman in the world, when she loves and is loved, is beautiful. Why? Because her innermost, subconscious self reacts to the knowledge that she has come to the threshold of living. It is partly, too, because she has completely forgotten herself in an outrush of spirit to something beyond herself.

Study a Mother.

See the true mother with her children. No matter how worn and burdened she may be, not matter how little she may have in the way of worldly adornment, she is the calm and unaware possessor of real and lasting beauty that shines through her eyes and her smile and her words.

See the artist at his easel; the author with his book; the botanist with his plants; the chemist in his laboratory. They reflect a variation of the same spirt of self-forgetfulness and self-expression and, insofar as they do, partake of the same essence of beauty.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Ducking Stool.

THE streets are lined with people, they're perched upon the steeple, they crowd the public way; a gossiping old lady whose conduct has been shady, is being ducked today. Neglecting useful labors, she talked about her neighbors, she gossiped like a fool; and now her wits forsake her, as stern officials take her to try the ducking stool. The ducking stool is grimy, the water's green and slimy; it is a dreadful bath; the poor old girl is choking, she uses language smoking, in anguish and in wrath. She comes up strangling, gasping, her breath is harshly rasping, she surely is all in; but there's no sign of pity in all the watching city, instead, a joyous din. Again they gayly dip her, into the slime they slip her, and gayly draw her out; and when they see her singing, nine quarts of water drinking, they raise a happy shout. Such scenes were often noted in that old time that's noted as being brave and gay; the time the bards are praising, in rich and golden phrasing, the time now far away. The girls, those human riddles, still tell their taradiddles, while sipping flagons cool; whatever their intention, no mortal dares to mention the old-time ducking stool.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Rheumatism and Heart Disease.

THERE is great interest in the prevention of heart disease—as there should be. A worthwhile effort to that end consists largely in work with children since the foundations of heart troubles are usually laid in childhood. These disorders, as a rule, do not cause many symptoms until the years of middle life, and the great majority of the fatalities from them come in the old age periods; but the basic damage is done in youth.

The principal disorders of childhood that are to be prevented if possible, and are to be well cared for, are: Rheumatism, growing pains, and St. Vitus dance. Rheumatism includes rheumatic pains in the muscles, as well as those in the joints. Rheumatic pains in the shoulders, arms, wrists, and hands are more dangerous than similar pains in the legs and feet.

It is recognized that acute inflammatory rheumatism belongs in the group of contagious diseases, but it has few points of resemblance to smallpox and other forms of contagious disease. It rarely spreads from patient to patient, there is seldom more than one case in a family, and the infectivity is very low. Yet although we know that infantile paralysis and cerebrospinal meningitis have similar peculiarities we do not hesitate to class them among the contagious diseases.

The cause of rheumatism is probably one of the streptococci and the portal of entry is the throat. There is generally a ten day interval between the sore throat and the attack of rheumatic heart disease. Therefore children with sore throat should have good care not only during the attack but for two weeks thereafter. Children who are subject to sore throat and rheumatic pain should be protected especially against exposure to scarlet fever. Exposure to diphtheria ranks below exposure to scarlet fever in danger to the heart. Measles ranks still lower.

The measures of protection will consist, among other things, in seeing that they wear good shoes and are feeling warmly clad. If their feet get wet they should change their shoes and stockings. The same advice is given as to wet clothing. They should not sit in school rooms that have cold floors. If they get a sore throat, rheumatic pains, or growing pains they should have care that is based on the heart possibilities rather than on the present symptoms.

Usually Harmless.

O. B. writes: For many years I have had a large wen or growth of some sort on the top of my head. It has never troubled in any way, and is successfully covered by my manner of wearing my hair. Would you advise the removal of this lump? It is quite large and, at times, it seems to flatten out. I have had it at least over 30 years.

REPLY.

No. Wens in this location are generally fatty tumors. They are benign and they grow slowly. They are harmless.

500 Brethren Church Youths Attend Session

Waynesboro, Va., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—The second district youth conference of the Church of the Brethren attracted more than 500 young people from the Shenandoah Valley to the Pleasant Valley Church today. "Climbing Up With Christ" was the conference theme.

Dr. Charles Wright, of Bridgewater College, was the recognition speaker. Addresses were also made by D. A. Cline, jr., Robert Garber, Prof. Nelson Huffman and John T. Glick. The consecration service was led by Miss Alice Graybill.

Bond Issue Voted In Anne Arundel

Commissioners Will Seek Bids for $750,000.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—A second attempt to sell a 30-year bond issue of $750,000, to take up county notes held by the Union Trust Co., has been authorized by the Anne Arundel County Commissioners. Bids were ordered advertised to be opened September 14 in court here.

The issue would efface the notes issued by the county board for "over-expenditure" of the county tax budget.

Borrowings of $400,000, $300,000 and $50,000 make up the total. The last sum was used to pave a road to S. W. Labrot's Holly Beach farm, at St. Margarets', third district.

Benjamin Louderback Buried in Page County

Luray, Va., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—Funeral services were held today at the Brick Church, this county, for Benjamin H. Louderback, 42, deputy postmaster of Stanley. One of the largest crowds ever assembled in the Shenandoah district attended. The burial was made only a short distance from where he was born.

Mr. Louderback's wife died a few months ago. His father, John S. Louderback, prominent Shenandoah farmer, died soon afterward.

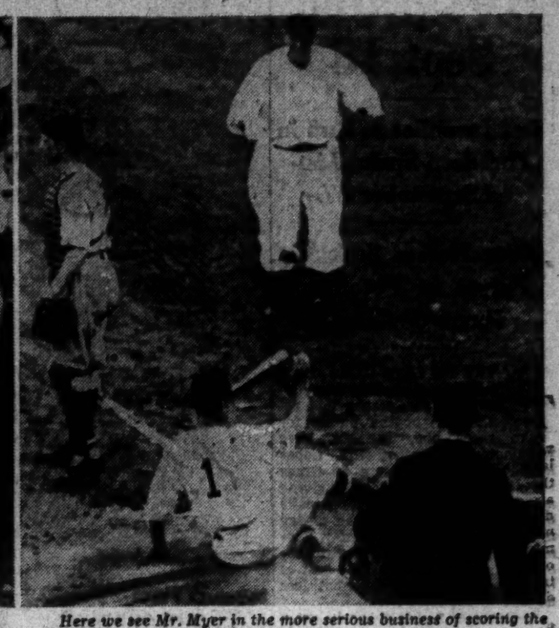
Nats' Two-Man Rally in 9th Defeats Red Sox, 3 to 2, as Yankees Idle

The hero of the game was Cliff Bolton, pictured above with his winning smile much in evidence. He obliged with a single and Bluege scampered home with the winning run.

There was a Washington angle to the Boston attack. Above we see Bill Werber, Capital boy who third sacks for the Red Sox, sliding into third safe and sound on his triple which opened the third inning. He scored the first run for the visitors on an infield out later in the inning. Werber used to play for Tech High and the old Knickerbockers here before going to Duke U.

"Miss Mississippi" provided some Biloxi training camp inspiration to the Nats. Here she is before the game being greeted by Buddy Myer, a fellow Mississippian. Left to right: Senator Pat Harrison, Myer, Representative William Colmer, "Miss Mississippi" (Dorothy Eley), Anthony V. Ragussin, secretary Biloxi Chamber of Commerce, Heinie Manush and Manager Joe Cronin.



Here we see Mr. Myer in the more serious business of scoring the Nats' second run, Goslin's double providing the momentum which also scored Luke Sewell. Only half of Umpire Red Ormsby is shown, but Heinie Manush, in the background, is seen calling Myer safe. That makes it official.

This Morning

With Shirley L. Povich.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 3

FIFTY-FIVE THOUSAND fans came out here to see the Braves today, and this correspondent came out to see the Giants, as a result of my sneaking suspecion that it would be the New York Club who would be the foemen of the Nats in the world series, barring miracles in both big league campaigns.

I got an eyefull of the imminent National League pennant winner that substantiated most all the nice things that are being said about the club that Bill Terry is piloting eight games out in front of the rest of the field. And some of the bad things.

The comparison of the two clubs, the Giants and the Nats, will come later, when old man Mathematical Certainty authorizes me to act, but at this writing I can say that I saw nothing this afternoon to cause the good burghers in Washington to shudder at the prospect of the Nats meeting the Giants.

One Difference Noted.

They are a good ball club, the Giants, and so are the Nats, and their probable clash in the world series bears all the earmarks of a rip-snorting postseason finale, with New York's superb defensive prowess pitted against Washington's attacking and own good defense. While the Giants were beating the Braves, 4 to 3, in 14 innings, and tying them, 4 to 4, in 9 innings, there appeared one great and radical difference in American League and National League games.

The great difference is in type of ball used. Whereas in the American League the umpires throw out a ball and call for a new pellet at the first sign of a scratch or smear, the National League umpires tolerate these evil-looking balls which at times today were so dark and dirty that they would not have been honored in any respectable sandlot game on the Monument grounds.

That item, together with the fact that the National League ball is constructed with a thicker cover, is very much in favor of the pitchers in the league. The ball when hit does not leave the bat with the resounding crack but emits soggy sound as if the bat had come in contact with a sack of corn meal. Only the genuine sluggers in the league can drive the balls out of the park and the infielders do not have to play with the same sprightliness as their American League rivals.

Mound Corps Brilliant.

This is no attempt to disparage the prowess of the Giants' talented pitching corps comprised of Hubbell, Fitzsimmons, Parmelee and Schumacher, for worthier critics than I have pronounced them great pitchers in any league, but the deader ball helps.

The world series battle, of course, will find the lively American League ball in play in the American League city with the thicker covered National League ball used in the park of the latter circuit.

Those Giants have given their pitchers very few runs to work with this season and a powerful factor in their success, aside from the truly phenomenal pitching the club has received, has been the impregnable play of the New York infield.

At first, the Giant Terry is an excellent target for his infielders' throws, ever reliable on bunts and other balls hit into his own territory. Blondy Ryan, at shortstop, also goes and gets 'em, but twice today Terry had to dig two Braves Beaten, 4-3, in 14th; Nightcap Ends in 4-4 Deadlock.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 3 (AP).—The Boston Braves checked out of the National League's red-hot pennant race today by dropping their fourth straight game to the New York Giants in the fourteenth inning of a 4-3 double-header opening before holding the leaders to a 4-4 tie in the finale that was halted by the 6:30 p. m. Sunday time limit with two out in the home team's side of the ninth.

Before the six-game series started last Thursday, Manager Bill McKechnie announced to the world that his Tribesmen would shoot the works against the Giants to make or break.

"If we can't beat them in our own park," he said, "then we have no right to the pennant."

When the Giants hit the wigwam Thursday, the Braves were trailing them in second place by six games. A clean-up of the series would have put the Braves even with the leaders. But they won only one of the six, the opener, and the four defeats have dropped them into third place, a full game behind the Pittsburgh Pirates, who will take their turn at attempting to stop the Giants on Tuesday.

Luque Giants' Hero.

Full credit for not only the Giants' 14-inning success but also their even break in the second game must be given to Adolfo Luque, the veteran relief pitcher.

He stepped into the breach when Bill Shores weakened after six innings of first game pitching and after getting out of a bad mess in the seventh at the cost of the tying run, kept the Braves at a standstill until his fourteenth inning when behind Travis Jackson's safety and two infield outs scored the winning baseman with the winning run.

Although he had pitched eight full innings, when Manager Bill Terry discovered that Charley Dressen was no proper replacement for Roy Parmelee in the second game, he sent the Cuban veteran back to the mound after the Braves had tied up the second game with two out in the eighth. Luque was throwing at the Braves as well as ever when the nightcap was

Tribe Swamps Chisox Behind Ferrell, 14-3

Cleveland, Sept. 3 (AP).—Wes Ferrell had little trouble getting his [illegible] victory of the season today as the Cleveland Indians pounded White Sox pitching for a 14-3 triumph.

Every Cleveland regular hit safely and scored at least once, as Heving, Wyatt and Faber were knocked around for 17 hits. Three White Sox errors also helped the Indians in their scoring splurge. The game was the last of an extended home stay for the White Sox.

Judge Tells Nats Of Giants' Hitters

While Joe Judge is first-basing for the Red Sox and his name has been off of the Washington Club's pay roll since last October, he still is a Nat at heart and proved it before yesterday's game. While with the Brooklyn Dodgers, Joe naturally got a good line on the New York Giant hitters.

For fully half an hour before Umpire Red Ormsby called "Play ball" yesterday, Judge was on the Washington bench not only telling the native pitchers what he considered the batting weaknesses of the Nats' likely world series opponents, but also tipping off the infielders and outfielders as to the territory in which they are most likely to pole their clouts.

Sets Swim Record.

Tokyo, Monday, Sept. 4 (U.P.).—Hideko Maehata today broke the Olympic record for the 200-meter breast-stroke swim by covering the course in 3 minutes 5.2 seconds. She was competing in the Negoya women's swimming contests.

Harmsworth Second Heat Today

ALGONAC, Mich., Sept. 3 (AP).—Defeated in the opening heat of the Harmsworth Trophy race, Hubert Scott-Paine, British challenger, was hopeful tonight that smoother water would prevail for the second contest with Gar Wood tomorrow afternoon.

The British pilot said today that throughout yesterday's opening heat, he did not get accustomed to the water. "There was a roll in the water; no surface," he said. "It was impossible to see where the roll began or where it finished."

Can Make Faster Time.

"I have no intention of trying to do anything spectacular," he said, concerning his plans for tomorrow's race. "If water conditions are suitable," he added, however, "I can put up much faster time and, of course, we shall know more about that on Monday evening."

He said he still thought his chances in the Harmsworth "are of the same value as when I left England."

A win for the British challenger tomorrow, would necessitate a third heat.

Wood, who had easy going with his big Miss America X yesterday, was confident that he would clinch the trophy with tomorrow's race.

"I did not open up Miss America X; I did not have to," he said, adding that he would be in Monday's race "to win."

Wood started the first race with a tremendous burst of speed, to be first across the starting line, although only by inches. Opening up his four 12-cylindered motors, he soon shot away from Scott-Paine and after gaining a lead of more than 2 miles, throttled his defender down and was going just a shade over 77 miles an hour at the finish.

Did Not Near 90 Mark.

Scott-Paine did not get the maximum speed out of his boat at any time during the race, according to the timer's records. The craft has been clocked at more than 100 miles an hour in trials, but it did not get near the 90-mile-an-hour mark at any time in the contest. The challenger said, however, that the craft had functioned perfectly, his only complaint being the "roll" of the course.

Primo and Baer In Battle From Dawn to Dusk

Culver City, Calif., Sept. 3 (AP).—In a battle which began shortly after breakfast and lasted well past supper time, Primo Carnera, world's heavyweight champion, fought Max Baer to a sensational draw here today.

But don't be disturbed! The match, which promoters all over the world have been seeking, took place in piece-meal fashion in motion picture's land of make-believe, before grinding cameras and glaring flood lights.

Baer held a substantial lead well past the noon hour, chasing the bulky champion from corner to corner, bringing grease paint blood from Carnera's nose. They fought that particular scene a couple of times, with fresh applications of makeup before each.

Once Jack Dempsey, as referee, had to be gone over with eyebrow pencil and powder puff before the show could go on.

Crawford and Vines Face Matches

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP).—Their numbers cut to 64, tennis international stars took a day of rest today preparatory to resuming action in the second round of the national singles championship tomorrow.

There was little in the 26 first-round matches yesterday to stir up even a modicum of excitement, as favorites, led by Frank Shields, of New York, and Fred Perry, of England, disposed of minor opposition with practically no trouble. Six other seeded players—Frankie Parker, Millburn, N. J.; George Lott, Chicago; Gregory Mangin, Newark; Ryosuke Nunoi, Japan, nad the Australian youngsters, Don Turnbull and Adrian Quist—andvanced with them into the second round.

Tomorrow's program will be marked by opening tests for Ellsworth Vines, winner of the title for the past two years, and one of his most dangerous challengers, Jack Crawford, of Australia.

Vines Meets Palmer.

Both drew first-round byes and thus plunge into the second round, Vines against Ray Palmer, of Malba, N. Y., in a stadium match at 12:30 (Eastern standard time) and Crawford against Julius Seligson, of New York, on the same court an hour later.

Other stadium matches send Berkeley Bell, of New York, against Manuel Alonso, former Spanish Davis Cup star, at 2:30, and Vivian McGrath, of Australia, against Wilmer Hines, of Columbia, S. C., at 4 o'clock.

Albany Star Purchased By Nats

Prim, 6-Foot Hurler, to Join Club Today at Boston.

PRESIDENT CLARK GRIFFITH last night announced the purchase of Ray Prim, southpaw pitcher, from the Albany International League Club and the newcomer has been ordered to join the Nationals in Boston tomorrow. Prim is 23 years old, 6 feet tall and weighs 173 pounds. His record with Albany is 14 victories as against 9 defeats.

Prim is a grad of Alabama Poly, but he made his pro debut in his junior year at college, playing in 1928 with the Alexandria team of the Cotton States League. He finished school the next season and then spent 1930 with the Greensboro Club and the following year at Durham. He was last year with Baltimore, being bought by Albany for the current campaign.

Early this season, just after he had pitched two successive four-hit games, the Chicago Cubs and Boston Braves both sought him and complications resulted which called for a ruling from Commissioner Landis, who decided neither team should get him.

Rate Prim Highly.

Both Manager Cronin and Owner Griffith rate him as a most promising prospect.

In addition to cash, the Nats surrendered their option on Pitcher Luther (Bud) Thomas, so he now is the outright property of the Albany Club.

The Nats, by the way, had options on five other players. Some time ago they canceled them on Infielder Jimmy McLeod and Pitcher Frank Ragland, and this pair is now playing with the Phillies. The strings have been pulled on two others, Infielder Cecil Travis and Pitcher Ed Linke, now with Chattanooga. Travis joins the Nats here Wednesday, while Linke will not report until the training season next spring. The other, Catcher Howard Maple, will not be recalled from the Lookouts.

The Nats left for Boston last night, where they open a three-game series with the Red Sox with a holiday double-header today. Walter Stewart is due to perform on the hill in one game and either Alec McColl or Ed Chapman in the other, with McColl more likely to get the call.

Joe Judge was slated to play first for the Red Sox yesterday, but he complained of a dizzy spell before the game and was excused.

Should the Nats win the pennant—and who is there in Washington who does not think that they will—seats for 35,000 will be available for the world's series, while 3,000 probably will find standing room. Bleachers will be built along the base of the left-field stands in the angle between the score-board and flagpole in center, and against the stands behind the plate.

The press box will be moved to the roof, making all the seats back of the wire in the upper stands available.

Secretary Eddie Eynon calls attention to the fact that the club is not considering applications now being received for series tickets and will not do so until announcement to this effect is made through the press.

Werber was too anxious to get started on the hit-and-run after singling in the fifth and Weaver neatly trapped him with a snap throw to first. It was just a matter of form for Kuhel to toss out the runner at second.

Bluege and Kuhel collaborated on a good play opening the seventh. The third-sacker took Hodapp's grounder on a bad hop behind third and the doorway guardian neatly gathered in the low peg which followed.

Cronin was robbed of a second hit in the eighth when his liner hit Andrews and caromed directly to Second-baseman McManus, who easily made the out at first. It was a painful assist for the pitcher.

Browns Win and Tie In Pair With Tigers

St. Louis, Sept. 3 (AP).—The St. Louis Browns closed their home season here today with a 2 to 1 victory over the Detroit Tigers in the first game and a 5 to 5 tie in the second, which was called after the ninth inning because of darkness.

George Blaeholder, supported by brilliant infield work, was the major factor in the Browns' victory, even though Tom Bridges, Detroit pitcher, held them to six hits. Blaeholder yielded eight safeties and was scored on only once, in the sixth, when Detroit bunched three hits.

Detroit's two-run rally in the eighth, tieing the score, and dark overhanging clouds turned the second game into a dud for both sides.

Bolton Slams Bluege Over To Decide

Goslin's Double Puts Nats Ahead in 3d; 12,000 Crowd.

FOR a while yesterday, it looked as though the Boston Red Sox, the Nats' pet victims in the American League this season, would forget their cue and take the decision but, through the efforts of Ossie Bluege and Pinch-hitter Cliff Bolton, the Washington club put them in their place in the ninth and copped a 3-to-2 verdict. It was the Nats' fifteenth victory in 19 games played with the Sox and, coupled with the fact that the runner-up Yankees were forced to idle because of rain, put the native club-swingers 8½ games in front in the pennant race.

Two were out in the ninth when the Nats suddenly remembered who

The Post's Scoreboard.

The Post's broadcast and scoreboard play-by-play of the Nat-Red Sox double-header today in Boston likely will be delayed because of the Firemen's annual Labor Day parade.

Play in Boston is scheduled to start at 12:30 o'clock, Washington time. If there is a necessary delay in the starting of operation of the scoreboard, a resume of what has happened in the game will be given and then the scoreboard will pick up the play from that point.

they were playing. Then Ossie Bluege singled and stole second. When Ivy Paul Andrews, alien pitcher, found himself in a hole while Sewell was at bat, he passed the home catcher. This called for a lot of debating with himself by Manager Joe Cronin, the big question being whether or not he should use a pinch-hitter for Pitcher Monte Weaver, who had held the visitors well in check

Finally Cronin decided upon Bolton, calling him in from the bullpen in right field. Bolton, who has specialized in breaking up Sunday games of late, picked out an offering to his liking, lined it sharply over shortstop, and Bluege and the 12,000 delirious fans went home.

Stage Mound Duel.

It was a great game to watch. Weaver and Andrews, both rookies, turned back the pages of baseball history to pitch effective ball. Weaver allowed seven hits while the Nats garnered but six from Andrews' slants. Add to this sensational fielding and threats killed in almost every inning and you have all the ingredients of an A No. 1 major league performance.

Although the Sox hit safely in every inning but the seventh and ninth and benefited from two walks and an error by Kuhel, except in their two scoring frames they were able to get but one man past first base. They molded their markers one at a time and in identical fashion. In the third, Bill Werber, former Tech High star, tripled and scored on an infield out, while it was Dusty Cooke who poled out the three-bagger in the sixth and tallied while Myer was tossing out Smead Jolley.

Three $10,000 Stakes to Feature 12-Day Meet at Havre de Grace Track

Session Due To Open on Sept. 18

Best Juveniles to Run in Aberdeen Sprint Listed September 27.

Older Horses Seek Big Purses in Potomac, Havre de Grace.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—Although many of the other race tracks have reduced the size of the purses for stake races and, in fact, have eliminated many of the richer stakes altogether, Havre de Grace officials are tempting fate by giving $30,000 added money for three stake races to be run during the 12-day meeting, which opens Monday, September 18, but Burke is a firm believer in giving turfites the best at all times, regardless of what loss it may incur.

Trainers of 2-year-olds will get a crack at a $10,000 purse on September 27, which is the date set for the Aberdeen, a dash of three-quarters of a mile. This year's renewal is the twenty-first and all signs point to a record entry list.

Potomac Listed September 23.

On September 23 the $10,000 Potomac, a mile and one-sixteenth affair, exclusively for 3-year-olds, will be run for the fifteenth consecutive season.

The twenty-second renewal of the $10,000 Havre de Grace Handicap will be offered on September 30. This race is a mile and one-eighth and is certain to attract the best handicap horses in training.

Previous runnings of the Aberdeen, Potomac and Havre de Grace Handicap have been won by great horses. However, there are some real speeders in training this year and their trainers have notified Race Secretary McLennan that they would be sent after the "ten grand" added money providing they stand training, which means that next month's racing will be well worthy of opening Maryland's fall mile season.

Best Stables to Enter.

Practically every prominent American and Canadian racing establishment has applied to General Manager Edward Burke for stalls. Burke is having Track Superintendent James Ross overhaul the entire plant in an effort to provide better accommodations, not only for the spectators, but the horsemen and their charges, as he well realizes the value of having the right stage setting.

The highways leading here from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington have been greatly improved since last spring's session and as there is free parking space on track property.

PERHAPS the most widespread fallacy in the world today is that the Chinese and other Asiatics are "slant-eyed" as opposed to Caucasians, who are not supposed to be "slant-eyed." As a matter of fact the Oriental eye appears to be oblique, not because it is oblique, but because the bridge of the nose, which supports the upper lid, is low.

This gives the eye a "slit" appearance, but the eye itself is not as slanted (i. e., not as far off a true horizontal line) as the Caucasian or white eye. The "oblique" eye of the Asiatic may be observed in white children at birth or even later when the bridge of the nose is low.

Young grebes spend most of their young life on the back of whichever parent is on the nest. The nest, which is built on the water, is a floating raft on which the eggs are laid and hatched. Because there is danger of fish grabbing the young if they swim unattended near the nest, they find safe refuge atop their parents' backs. The young are able to swim almost at birth.

Dear Al: Lincoln Fields, September 3.

Well, friend, I wish my horses would come home as smoothly as I flew back to Chicago today. The pilot (I forgot to get his name) must be the "Westrope of the air." He set me down in Chicago a nose in front of Mike, who was supposed to meet me at the airport. Mike was late as usual, but he was driving a new car—the result of those winning days he had here while I was boiling out at Marlboro. I believe we can expect some profitable wagering during the next few days. Now that Mike has become a great selector, it's going to be too bad for the bookies when two great men get together picking horses.

BILL.

First race—Louie Dear seems the best suited of these sprinters and needs only to run back to the 1:11 2-5 he clipped off at Arlington to come sliding home. If Louie is in need of a conditioner, Alpers or Timorous will take the long end of the purse.

Second race—Peedeeque has to have racing luck to win. This one is a slow breaker but really picks them up in the stretch. Understand he is ready for a real effort tomorrow. Domino Player has a lot of class and turned in a fine race last out. Even Play to get in the money picture.

Third race—Looks like a chalk victory for Trinchera. This one picks up no weight and meets no tougher company. Just a formality. Volta Maid and Pancho Lopez to fill the place and show positions.

Fourth race—Ted Clark ran a powerful race at Hawthorne at a mere 92-1. A victory for him here would not surprise the Bennings interests. Yonkel is the one to beat. In fine form. Mountain Elk for the show end.

Fifth race—Cathop will appreciate that added furlong and I can't picture a miss. Comes off a fast race. Lemon Hills is another that will like this distance. North Mill to chase the top pair home.

Sixth race—I'm going to try to upset these good juveniles with a little High Cloud gelding named Wacoche. This one takes off seven pounds here and was beaten only a small margin by Don Manuel. The last named is the one to beat. Trey for the show.

Seventh race—Aladdin's Dream gets the Bennings call in this race. Packs a lot of punch when the big dough is on the line. Damascene only runs when there's a chance. May be second ahead of Boy Crazy.

Eighth race—Brown Wisdom seldom runs two races alike. However, this looks like the spot for a repeater. Port o' Play and King Pin for the place and show.

Fight Features Listed for Boston

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (AP).—Boston promoters take over the task of keeping boxing followers amused this week.

Starting with a ten-round heavyweight duel between Tuffy Griffiths and Tony Shucco Wednesday night in the Mechanics' Building, the Hub program comes to a climax in the Boston Garden Friday night, when Sammy Fuller tackles Billy Petrolle in a welterweight duel.

Monday—At Ellensburg, Wash., Leon (Bombo) Chevalier, San Francisco, vs. Frank Van Ilse, Seattle, heavyweights, 10; at Windsor, Ontario, Sammy Mandell, Rockford, Ill., vs. Joe Rivers, welterweights, 10; at Atlantic City, Salvatore Ruggirello, Italy, vs. Al Ettore, Philadelphia, heavyweights, 10.

Tuesday—At Syracuse, Lou Scozza, Buffalo, vs. Johnny Nelson, Syracuse, lightheavyweights, 10; at Newark, Ben Jeby, New York, vs. Joey Lagrey, Garfield, N. J., middleweights; Abe Feldman, New York, vs. Lou Barba, New York, heavyweights, and Phil Rafferty, New York, vs. Johnnie O'Keefe, Garfield, welterweights, each 10, and Frank Montagna, Madison, vs. Justin Sirutis, New York, heavyweights, 10; at Los Angeles, Lew Massey, Philadelphia, vs. Young Peter Jackson, Los Angeles, lightweights, 10.

Wednesday—At Boston (Mechanics' Building), Tuffy Griffiths, Sioux City, Iowa, vs. Tony Shucco, Boston, heavyweights, 10; at San Francisco, Tony Poloni, Reno, vs. Billy Donohue, New York, light-heavyweights, 10, and Little Dempsey, Philippines, vs. Al Citrino, San Francisco, featherweights, 6.

Stanton Cleaners Defeat Blue Coals to Take Capital City Unlimited Lead

First Defeat Charged to Griffs

3,000 Crowd Sees Errors Help Stantons Cop Decision, 5 to 3

STANTON CLEANERS forged ahead of the Griffith-Blue Coals in their race for Capital City League honors yesterday, winning over their rivals, 5-3, in an exciting game played on the Ellipse. A crowd of 3,000 fans saw the Griffs tumbled from the lofty perch by their own errors.

It was the fifth consecutive victory for Al Clark's fence-wreckers and the first defeat in five games for their opponents. Three more foes confront the Stantons before they can claim the second half honors.

The Griffs assumed the lead in the third inning when Parks, Benner and Wingate were prodded around the pathways after driving out singles. Ray Davidson wobbled slightly during the inning, but regained his bearings and hurled shutout ball over the remainder of the route to turn the tide in the Stantons' favor.

Error Starts Rally.

One man was out when Joe Hough, Griff second sacker, fumbled Morris' hit. Before the side could be retired five runners scampered over the pan with the winning runs.

While the leaders were settling their dispute, Tony Burruto's American Linen tossers nosed out the Federals, 7-5, by way of variety. It was the Linenmen's first win in three games.

But for costly errors by the supporting cast, Nellie Jett, winning hurler, would have had a shutout. Jack Caspar, slugging outfielder, led the winning attack with four hits, including two doubles. George Mosedale whipped the horsehide for three hits to help the winning drive.

"Overtennised" Angle Denied In Davis Cup Team Report

NEW YORK, Sept. 3 (AP).—Offering no alibi whatever for the unexpected defeat of the American Davis Cup Team by the British this year, Bernon S. Prentice today made public his official report as chairman of the United States Davis Cup committee, defending the entire course of the 1933 campaign and recommending only in general terms that "those anticipating strenuous tennis in the spring and summer should reduce their play during the winter months."

Prentice referred to the "mental staleness" caused by continual play, such as "Ellsworth Vines and Wilmer Allison, the American singles aces engaged in by touring Australia last winter, but offset this suggestion of criticism by remarking that the hero of the British victory, Fred Perry, also had played continually during the previous year, including a trip to South Africa.

Team Not "Overtennised."

The Davis Cup chairman branded as "absurd" the charge that the American team was overtennised or overtrained, otherwise; insisted that complete harmony prevailed within the organization, pointed out that financially "we did better than break even" and sounded an optimistic note for Americans in the shift of deciding play from France's hard courts to England's turf.

"It is unfortunate that, due to misunderstandings through press comments, certain facts in connection with our European play should have to be laid before you," said the report. "Last year when England was unexpectedly defeated in the interzone finals by Germany, no explanations were given and no excuses made. England took her defeat without comment and hoped for better luck next time. * * * The answer is that England does not take her sports too seriously and realizes that excuses and alibis are not consistent with sportsmanship and playing the game.

Was a Great Victory.

"We know that to have matched Austin and Perry on the days we played them, on a court perfectly suited to their games, Vines and Allison would have had to have been at the very top of their form. Nothing can detract from their great victory and their record is magnificent.

"Certainly the charge that our team had too much tennis in Paris during the two weeks prior to the interzone match is absurd. * * * Our team was composed of experienced players; they practiced when and as they saw fit. On close observation, I consider they used the best of judgment.

"Allison played good tennis in his match against Austin and the result was in doubt until the final point—a close four-set match. Austin, in his match against Vines, was playing practically errorless tennis. To have met this class with any degree of success Vines would have had to be at the top of his game and would have needed absolute concentration before and during the match, which he did not seem to have.

Vines Wouldn't Quit.

In his final match with Perry, which had no bearing on the result and in which he sprained an ankle and finally collapsed, we made every effort to persuade him to stop. He insisted on going on, which I considered his privilege and I have the highest respect for his gameness.

"As to the coaching of our team, Mercer Beasley went to France as a correspondent of an American newspaper syndicate. He was not officially attached in any way to our team. Both Vines and Allison urgently asked to have him go with us to France, which we found impossible, and they were pleased to hear that he was to make the trip independently. He made himself available at all times to them when called upon."

G. W. Gridmen In Strenuous Workout

Forty Players Report at Camp; Stewart Has Ear Infection.

CAMP LETTS, Md., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—A squad of 40 George Washington University football players reported for the initial drill of the season here today. A hot sun beamed down upon the perspiring huskies, but those in charge drove them relentlessly for two hours in a strenuous workout.

All candidates are not in camp. Two groups coming from the Midwest are expected today. Joe Walsh, brother of Assistant Coach Len Walsh and considered a fine backfield prospect, wired that he will not report for preliminary practice because of the serious illness of his father. It is doubtful if the lad will return to school.

Full equipment was issued to all players. There will be no limbering up stage to the drills. Coach Pixlee is confronted with the difficult task of whipping the squad into shape in three weeks for the toughest schedule ever assigned G. W.

Divided Into Groups.

The players have been divided into three groups, freshmen, lettermen and reserves and sophomores, known as the Blues, Reds and Yellows, respectively.

For two hours the linemen pushed the "sled," a bucking machine, around the yard. The backs practiced passing and kicking. Sid Kolker, weighing 218 pounds, and Phil Kline, 200, both Washingtonians, reported in excellent condition.

Pixlee hopes to have the squad far enough advanced by the middle of the week to scrimmage. Two drills are listed tomorrow and every day thereafter.

Zuzu Stewart, star guard, was returned to Washington tonight to have an infected ear treated.

Horace Dodge's Boat Wins Memorial Race

Detroit, Sept. 3 (AP).—Horace Dodge, driving the Delphine VII, kept the Dodge Memorial Trophy in the family today by winning two of the three heats.

Only three boats started and one of them, Victor L. Kleisrath's Hotsy Totsy, of South Bend, Ind., was forced out at the end of the second heat with a large hole in its bottom. It was third in both heats it raced.

George Reis' El Lagarto, of Lake George, N. Y., which wrested the prized gold cup from Dodge Friday, did not compete because it was dismantled for inspection following the gold cup race. Dodge had insisted upon the inspection, provided for in the gold cup rules.

With El Lagarto out of the running, there was no serious competition for the Dodge fleet.

French Nine Routed By Front Royal Stars

Front Royal, Va., Sept. 3 (Spl.).—Pounding two visiting hurlers for 15 hits, the All-Stars shut out the French A. C., of Washington, here this afternoon, 13 to 0. Led by Goodwin, who collected two homers and a double to drive in seven runs, the locals piled up a nine-run lead in the first four innings. Jewett held the French to six hits, and was seldom in danger. In addition to Goodwin, Casarotti also collected three hits for the Stars while Clapper and Bradshaw, with two each, were best for the visitors.

Denny Shute, British open champion, and Ed Dudley, both members of the 1933 Ryder Cup team, will show their wares at Kenwood, in October, in an exhibition match with Al Houghton, Kenwood pro, and Wee Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va.

Houghton, returning yesterday from Hershey, Pa., where he placed seventh in the Hershey invitation won by Dudley, virtually completed arangements for the match.

Ace Proves High, Deuces Are Wild

Dr. Roy Adams scored one of those rare Chevy Chase holes-in-one on the 145-yard fourth hole, while Mr. and Mrs. Y. E. Booker, playing with him, made deuces. Dr. Adams used a No. 3 iron. His ball dropped a few feet from the cup and trickled in. Mr. Booker canned his putt from 25 feet for a two, and Mrs. Booker nailed her putt from 20.

Four under par on one hole for three golfers—not bad, eh!

8th-Place Reds End Streak Of Bucs

Pirates Stopped, 9 to 3, Following 8 Victories in Succession.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 3 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates' headlong drive in which they had won eight straight games, was stopped dead today by the tail-end Reds, who beat them, 9 to 2, although both teams got 12 hits.

Ralph Birkofer, a rookie pitcher, was the chief victim of the Red's fun-making attack, but Waite Hoyt also was trampled upon when he went to the rescue. Red Lucas hurled for Cincinnati.

The Reds got to Birkofer for a single run in the second after Jensen muffed Roettger's long fly near the score board. Roettger scored on Lombardi's fly to Lindstrom.

Pirates Knot String.

The Pirates tied the score in the following inning on a double and two singles, and took a one-run lead in the fifth inning on two singles and a fly.

In the latter half of the fifth, however, the Reds turned loose a barrage.

The Pirates got their third and only run in the seventh on a two-bagger and a single.

Peace Periled By Naval Race, English Fear

(Copyright, 1933, by the United Press.)

London, Sept. 3 (U.P.).—The threat of a naval building race among the three most powerful sea nations—Great Britain, the United States and Japan—cast deeper gloom over British statesmen tonight for the success of the world's efforts to disarm.

The naval race, coupled with the revival of secret diplomacy on the continent of Europe, tending to isolate Germany, admittedly has rekindled latent war fears and makes the outlook for success at the disarmament conference at Geneva next month blacker than at any time in the two years of its existence.

Japan Speeds Program.

Japan's intention to speed up her naval program to match that recently announced by Washington was all that was needed by Britain's "big navy" proponents to proclaim that the empire stands menaced unless Britain keeps pace.

This cry, taken up by the popular press over the week-end, is tending to ease the task of the admiralty in pushing through a building program.

On the continent the growing suspicion among nations was further aroused by an article in the newspaper Dernieres Nouvelles de Strasbourg, at Strasbourg, declaring that Germany could prepare herself for war within six months.

Meanwhile, the gigantic Nazi demonstration at Nuremburg was shrewdly utilized by Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, of Austria, to obtain the open consent of the worried allies—England, France and Italy—to enlarge the Austrian army, under the treaty of St. Germain. This may delay the explosion of the Austro-German powder barrel, but at the same time it increases the danger of such an eruption, in the opinion of many observers.

Soviet New Threat.

The direction of Moscow's leanings may be judged by yesterday's announcement of the Italian-Soviet pact of nonaggression, and the presence in Moscow of former Premier Edouard Herriot, of France.

Herriot's visit to Russia is viewed by the British as highly significant, and possibly a return to the old prewar alliance between France and the Russians.

Virginia Foresters Aid inFlood Areas

Recruits Fight Forest Fire in Western Sections.

(Associated Press.)

Fire and flood took 5,000 Civilian Conservation Corps men from their reforestation work to disaster prevention and relief last week. The corps' activities were summarized yesterday at headquarters.

In Virginia, 600 corps members in the Colonial National Park and the Richmond battlefield areas were hastened to the seacoast to aid rehabilitation of the storm-swept area.

For more than a week 1,800 conservation men have fought a forest fire in Oregon and 1,000 from the Santa Barbara National forest turned to fire fighting in that region. Near Boise, Idaho, 1,000 are battling flames. Other forest fire work has been reported in Minnesota and Maine.

Dr. Butler Sees Parallel Of Nazis, Prohibition

Southampton, N. Y., Sept. 3 (AP). Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler declared today retention of the eighteenth amendment "would have done for the Federal form of government of the United States what the Nazis are doing for the federal form of government in Germany."

The president of Columbia University, speaking at the Parrish Art Museum, pleaded for establishment of a council of foreign relations to enable our Government to "negotiate in responsible and definite fashion" with other nations.

U. S. Employe Union Head Hits Pay Cuts

Kansas City, Sept. 3 (AP).—Luther C. Steward, of Washington, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes, deplored the extent of the wage cuts assessed against its members in a speech tonight and said, "The Federal Government itself should change its own policies so that it may wear the NRA."

Hutton Spurns Wife's Truce

"No Reconciliation," Says Singing Husband of Evangelist.

Minneapolis, Sept. 3 (AP).—David Hutton, singer-husband of Aimee McPherson Hutton, today said he had an NRA of his own—no reconciliation with Aimee.

"She talks too much," said Hutton, in reply to a question about a purported reconciliation. "What does she think this is, a game of checkers?

"I made the first move, didn't I, when I filed the divorce action? It's her move now."

Loosening a flood of grievance, including Aimee's observation that "there were singers better than him," Hutton blamed the evangelist, here for a series of gospel meetings, for creating the impression that a reconciliation was in prospect.

"She has been talking reconciliation ever since I filed the divorce suit," he said. "When I married Aimee I married the whole Angelus Temple, Brother Arthur, Sister Hattie Jordan and the Bible school. Why, the elders of the temple even told her whether to get married."

Kin of Man, 82, Found Dead At Roadside, Hunted Here

John Bortz, 82, ended his life beside a Montgomery County road, and now police are almost willing to admit the truth of the cryptic note found on him saying he had no home.

Reputed to have left a $10,000 estate, his body is at the Warner E. Pumphrey funeral home, at Rockville. So far police have been unable to find claimants for either the body or the estate.

Police now are running down a clew that he has a married daughter in Wauchula, Fla., although they do not know her married name. Detective Corpl. Theodore Vollten, in charge of the county identification bureau, has sent letters to police chiefs there and appealed to newspapers for aid in the search for relatives.

Bortz was found beside the Colesville Pike not far from Colesville several days ago. He apparently had seated himself to rest in the shade during a hiking trip and died.

Mollisons' New Plane Almost Ready for Hop

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—Amy Johnson Mollison, young English veteran of many hard flights, believes she and her husband can better the world long distance record when they take off this fall from America.

Their ship, a duplicate of the one in which they crossed the Atlantic, will be ready in two weeks. Mollison, now in England, will join his wife here soon and they will wait on the East Coast for favorable weather.

Factory Pay Rolls Increase Faster Than Prices Rise

Employment Up 21.9 Per Cent as Food Costs Grow About 5.9.

(Associated Press.)

While the recovery program has taken some toll from the consumer's pocketbook and there are prospects of further inroads, Government statistics disclose that factory pay rolls and employment have increased at a faster rate than prices in the last year.

Retail food prices in the 51 principal cities reporting to the Bureau of Labor statistics increased an average of 5.9 per cent in the 12-month period from August 15, 1932, to August 15, 1933.

Factory employment as reported by representative establishments in 89 of the principal manufacturing industries last July was 21.9 per cent above the level of July, 1932, while pay rolls in these factories were 28.5 per cent higher.

August and July figures for general cost of living are not available but Government statisticians say it is safe to assume that the increase for the year was not greater than that of food prices. In fact, for the period from June, 1932, to June, 1933, there were decreases in living cost items which ranged from 3.9 per cent to 7.7 per cent and averaged 5.5 per cent for the United States. In that same period factory employment rose 9.2 per cent and pay rolls 9.6 per cent.

Retail food prices in August were back to the approximate level of February, 1932. Factory employment in July was about 2 index points above the February, 1932, level while factory pay rolls were still 3 points below the mark of that month.

Outlaw Caught In Gun Battle

Kansas Murder Suspect Is Caught in Family Feud; Brother Escapes.

Ottawa, Kans., Sept. 3 (AP).—A family feud led to the wounding of two outlaw brothers and capture of one today.

Cecil Thornbrugh was shot through a shoulder and one arm when he went to the Prescott, Kans., home of his estranged bride, Esther, 17, with threats against his father-in-law, Will McCormick. Harold Thornbrugh, his brother, was wounded in fleeing from officers later at his Quenemo, Kans., home.

"I came to get him," members of the family quoted Cecil Thornbrugh as saying when he entered the McCormick house.

Officers said he was shot by McCormick.

With his brother and a woman, who said she was Barbara Schmidt, Minneapolis waitress, the wounded man motored to Pomona, Kans., for medical treatment, then drove to the Thornbrugh home in Quenemo. The physician notified officers.

Murray Seyler and Will Shannon, sheriff's deputies, surprised the trio in Quenemo, capturing the wounded man and the woman without resistance.

Harold fled. He was knocked down twice by officers' bullets, but escaped on foot into a wooded region.

A pistol was shot from his hand. In the brothers' car officers found two rifles, two revolvers and a shotgun.

Red Cross to Start Sewing Tomorrow

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The Alexandria Chapter of the American Red Cross will start activities tomorrow with the opening of the sewing rooms at the Westminster Building, from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m. daily, for the production of garments to be distributed next winter.

Volunteer workers will assemble with Mrs. Leroy E. Peabody, secretary, who is in charge of this work in the absence of Miss Margery Hall, chairman for garment distribution.

Dresses and boy's shirts are needed before the opening of schools, and the committee urges all who can give a few hours each day, or one day a week, to meet at the rooms to assist.

Farm Bureau Supports War Upon Sugar Quota

Chicago, Sept. 3 (AP).—The American Farm Bureau Federation today appealed to domestic sugar producers and refiners to oppose any code under the agricultural adjustment act that would put American sugar on a quota basis in comparison with the foreign product.

In a communication addressed to all member groups, the federation said it took action after protests filed by Western State farm bureaus which said the quota limitation would crowd domestic producers out of the market they now have.

Minister Finds Deeds of Men Boomeranglike

Man's work lives after him, and by a man's work he is known, the Rev. Forney Hutchinson reminded his congregation in Labor Day services yesterday at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church.

In results, in friends and in character a man's work follows him, Dr. Hutchinson said. "Whatever thy hand finds to do, do it with thy might," he quoted.

"A good life counts with God in the matter of reward or recognition we receive in this life or the life to come. Blessed is the man who in the war against sin has received some wounds that in the Judgment Day will plead for him.

"You can tell what a man is by the kind of work he does. But while a man's work is an index to his character, his character is also a product of his work. What he does is like a boomerang that circles around and touches others and finally comes back to him, making him weaker or stronger.

"The most serious thing about a slovenly piece of work is it develops a slovenly workman."

Japan in Second Place In Exports to Panama

Panama, R. P., Sept. 3 (AP).—Japan has replaced Great Britain as the second largest exporter to Panama, August figures today showed.

Imports from Japan rose from $16,281, last January, to $109,745 in August. The United States supplies more than half of Panama's needs.

Need of Putting God in Leisure And Work Told

Rev. Clifford Jope Tells Why Heathenism Has No Labor Day.

"Let's put God in our leisure time, and let's put God in our work," was the Rev. Clifford H. Jope's suggestion in his sermon yesterday at the Ninth Street Christian Church.

"Labor Day," he said, "is increasingly significant because of the large place and influence of the laboring man, and because his voice is being heard in the important affairs of the world. It honors those operatives and artisans who have created wealth rather than those whose work is mental.

"The sad thing is these men have not always received a just share of the wealth, progress or comfort they have created. Until recently the laborer was like the serf of the feudal era. Now he has fought to obtain nearly his own rights.

"With 10,500,000 out of work, the laborers have the right to demand that the capital they sweated to create serve them by giving them jobs.

"Labor is not an end in itself. It produces more than wealth, progress and comfort. It produces character, life. While we labor we are in fellowship with God. Heathenism has no Labor Day.

"We are such a generation of spenders, wasters and pleasure seekers. We don't know how to use properly and profitably our most precious possession—time."

"Friend" Steals $800 and Ring

Harry E. Harrison, of St. Michael, Md., thinks Washington has the most persistent robber in the country.

That was his opinion yesterday when he left a local hotel, minus $800 and a $500 diamond ring taken by a "friend" who robbed and beat him three times within an hour.

They rode some more, after getting things patched up. But it was not long before the stranger again struck Harrison in the face, taking the diamond ring.

Harrison was quite angry. But they came to an agreement.

Agreement Is Made.

The stranger failed to keep his promise. He absconded with the $800. And once more he beat Harrison.

Professor's Death Remains Mystery

Dr. William Weller's Rites Await Embassy Orders.

Funeral services for Dr. William Weller, found dead in his room under mysterious circumstances at 3902 Georgia avenue northwest, were pending arrangements with the German Embassy last night.

Assistant professor of German at Howard University last year, Dr. Weller, 28, was found dead early Saturday by his landlady.

Dr. C. R. Pickels, fellow instructor, returned to Washington yesterday to aid with arrangements. A note in German shorthand found in Dr. Weller's room, translated by Dr. Pickels, had no bearing on the death.

Acting Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald stated that evidences of poison were shown by an autopsy. He refused to issue a death certificate until a chemical analysis of the stomach was complete.

Missing Link of Cat Family Of West Unearthed in Idaho

Discovery of two hitherto undescribed ancient cats—one of them very probably close to the ancestral line of the living puma and the second oldest member of the genus which, according to most authorities, includes most living members of the cat family from the tiger to the house cat—is announced by the Smithsonian Institution. They lived in southern Idaho just before the coming of the great ice sheets. They are described from skeletal material gathered by Smithsonian paleontologists while seeking fossil bones of ancient horses.

The two species may represent a transition period between the old and the newer cats of the Western Hemisphere. On one side of the line were the great saber-tooth cats and their close relatives, some of the most efficient killers the animal world has known. Perhaps their very efficiency hastened their demise—they exhausted their own meat supply. On the other side were the cats of today, represented in the New World by the jaguar, the puma and a number of smaller animals.

Small Saber-Tooth Type.

One of the ancient cats found in the southern Idaho material by Dr. C. Lewis Gazin, of the Smithsonian staff, is a small representative of the saber-tooth family. Indications are that it was a late representative of this particular genus that was well on its way out of the world during the Pliocene geological era. It has some characteristics, however, of the true cat, says Dr. Cazin, in a report published in the Journal of Mammalogy.

The other find is undoubtedly a true cat, and among the living animals of the Western Hemisphere seems to resemble most closely the puma, although there are outstanding differences that distinguish the two animals. It probably was not directly ancestral to the puma, but a close relative.

Widely Distributed.

These creatures attained a foothold that was to make them, up to quite recent years, perhaps the most widely distributed of the larger New World mammals, ranging over most of North and South America.

The saber-tooth species, Dr. Gazin points out, evidently was one of the latest survivals in the New World of this special genus, although it is known to have persisted well into the ice ages of the Old World. Previous finds in this country are apparently all from beds of Miocene or lower Pliocene age, indicating that they lived from 15,000,00 to 30,000,000 years ago.

250 Baptized Amid Shouts Of Multitude

Sunny skies above, muddy waters beneath, Elder Michaux's flag-bedecked barge, floating at the foot of Water and O streets yesterday with 250 white-robed candidates for baptism thereon, brought out 10,000 persons to witness the evangelical spectacle.

They crowded the pier of the 260th Coast Guard Artillery, roofs of the boathouse and car barn, channel banks to the War College wall and decks of the steamer E. Madison Hall, which held the elder's barge in tow. Motorboats and other craft held film and radio operators.

Deacon Unafraid.

Gray-robed choir and white-robed, turbaned candidates for baptism, filled the barge, steps of which were guarded—down to the water's edge—by an ancient Negro deacon.

Motion picture operators, immersed to their shoulders as the baptismal ceremonies began, bowed their heads when Elder Michaux said:

"You must be born of water as well as the spirit. I shall do you like John did Jesus—and he didn't do him wrong."

The elder, following his sermon from the barge to a radio audience on WJSV, in a black gown and aided by three others similarly clothed, waded between a double line of white-robed masculine candidates to the baptismal spot where men in rowboats held microphones and a dozen motion picture cameras were trained upon him.

Come Wading and Swimming.

Women of every age and size passed through the watery line, swimming, floating, shouting, wading, waving hands in response to the elder's exhortation, until he clasped them in his arms and dipped them beneath the Potomac's muddy waters. Up they came, shouting, splashing, leaping, waving hands and praising Heaven, while the choir chanted incessantly "O Wonderful Freedom."

From the shore crowds joined in the singing until a hush fell over the scene as two women appeared with children in their arms. Hebrew children. Two boys, about five and seven, joined the ranks of the baptized amid cheers of the multitude. Men who had formed the double column broke ranks and came to be baptized too, leaving the barge fifty yards away.

Awed Crowd Cheers.

Then, in the distance, alone on the floating steps, the Forgotten Woman was observed. Elderly, clothed in white, leaning upon a cane—left behind! The Elder explained his position.

"Yonder is a woman," he said, "who, on confession of faith, wants to be baptized seven times. She is paralyzed. It is her belief, and her faith, such baptism will make her whole. In this matter I'm her servant. Let her come!"

Strong arms seized her and bore her down the steps to the Elder. The audience, anticipating a miracle, watched in awed silence as she was immersed seven times. And as she made her way back to the barge alone, there arose from the multitude cheers that could be heard in the soaring planes.

The evangelical choir closed the rites with the song of cheer, "Happy Am I With My Redeemer."

Novice U. S. Radio Operators Stand by for Florida Storm

Amateurs Clear Channels of All Unnecessary Communication.

As the gravity of the situation became known, and it appeared likely that normal communications would fail, amateurs established an impromptu "circuit." Among Washington operators participating was Roy W. Corderman, 4401 Leland Station W3ZD.

In responce to requests from Florida amateurs, operators in the eastern half of the country stayed off the air. The Florida stations established communication with a Kingsport, Tenn., station, which agreed to pick up messages and rebroadcast them for stations to the north and west.

Besides the money to be spent by the Tennessee Valley authority, other Federal agencies are committed to the expenditure of more than $56,000,000 in the district.

Under the national recovery act, the Tennessee Valley authority said, $20,000,000 will be spent for construction and reforestation. Also available is $30,000,000 from the agricultural credit system and $6,000,000 from Federal relief grants and benefits under the farm relief bill.

Church Urged To Assist U. S. Recovery Plan

Rev. R. J. Clinchy Calls for Unselfish Brotherly Love in Program.

Calling religion "the essential factor in National recovery," the Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, minister of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, spoke at yesterday's morning service.

"Achievement of recovery demands a new evangelical effort of religion," he said, "dedicated, not only to the longing to save men from hell for heaven, but for just as sincere a passion, to save men from selfish desire, and for the establishment of the dream of Jesus for an order of love in the life of mankind. The major task is not political, not governmental, but religious.

"We shall reach National recovery only in the measure that we have men and women who believe that they should bear one another's burdens, that the dominating motive of life should be unselfish service rather than unlimited individual profit.

"Once there were compulsions of a passion," he said, "a love for those who were lost, which sent a former generation out to save men from hell. Those forces are necessary now to move us to build in our land the social order for which prophets have pleaded."

Dr. Clinchy then charged the church with the task of bringing about this attitude.

"We now have our plans. We must now begin with ourselves, becoming born anew with the dedication to Christian conceptions of living."

Plasterer Ends Life With Gun

Despondent over unemployment, James A. Oliver, a plasterer, shot himself through the right temple and died in his room at 1021 Eighth street northwest, early yesterday.

His roommate, Emmett Greaver, found him dead. Investigation by Acting Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald revealed Oliver's finger still grasping the trigger of the revolver, on which he had fallen.

Oliver had been in Washington for nearly a year and had been employed but one day. He was about 60 years old. According to Greaver, he had threatened suicide before. He is separated from his wife, who lives in Chicago. Others of his relatives live in New York and in Asheville and Charlotte, N. C. He was born in Canada.

Stream Regulating Hearing to Fix Cost

Power Board Expects to Establish Precedent.

(Associated Press.)

The Federal Power Commission will undertake to lay down a rule to determine what one power company owes another for regulating the flow of a stream at hearings beginning today on the Pacific Coast.

The commission, in a statement yesterday, said the case is "of great importance," not only because of the money involved, "but because the commission's decision will determine principles for future application in similar cases in California and other States."

The hearings, opening at San Francisco, involve a case between the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, a subsidiary of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. and the Southern California Edison Co., Ltd., the two largest utility companies on the West Coast.

Bank Quarrel Goes to Court

Hearing on United States Savings-Hamilton Merger Set.

Col. Wade H. Cooper's fight to prevent the United States Savings Bank from entering the Hamilton National Bank merger will be brought into court Tuesday.

Supreme Court Justice Jennings Bailey is scheduled to begin hearings at 10 a. m. on injunction proceedings brought by Col. Cooper, majority stockholder of the United States Bank, to block purchase of the bank's quick assets by the Hamilton group.

Court proceedings were decided upon yesterday after Mr. Cooper's attorney, W. Bissel Thomas, at an informal hearing Saturday, objected to Justice Jesse C. Adkins hearing the case on the grounds that the jurist was a one-time stockholder in a company financially interested in the Federal-American National Bank & Trust Co.

Ten fine men on the Rescue Squad—
Race like wind that the devil shod—
Blow, horn, blow, and siren screech!
If the Fire Squad's late some bloke may die.
So they break speed laws as away they fly
Behind that wild-eyed driving guy
Who sits up front
On a high red seat,
Steps on the gas
And shoots down the street
Like a streak from hell. He eats raw meat
And blows his horn as the sirens greet
A lost soul prays, lifts a voice to God

Back, Kefauver started again to eat lunch. Just as he raised his fork to his mouth the bell rang again—and the squad went out to resuscitate a drowning man.

For the third time, Lieut. Kefauver settled down to appease a fast-growing appetite, despite all the interruptions—and the bell rang again.

By the time Lieut. Kefauver finally disposed of his noonday lunch it was 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

A man never knows from one moment to the next just what may happen in this cock-eyed world. That is, the ordinary man never knows; but members of the Fire Rescue Squad know that the moment they prepare to roll over for another little nap, or to sit down to enjoy a meal, the bell is going to ring and they, in turn, are going out on the job.

All Kinds of Duties.

It may be to save a cat treed by a dog, or release an imprisoned child-locked in a house—or pry some bank teller out of a vault; or, any number of things.

Twenty men—hand-picked by Chief Watson himself—make up the personnel of the Fire Rescue Squad, an outfit that is probably more familiar on Washington streets than the traffic signal. Ten times a day, on an average, the Rescue Squad is going somewhere—and in a hurry.

So that nerves will not shatter all at once, they have divided the work into two parts—night and day. One gang stays on the job from 6 o'clock in the morning to 8 at night, and the other gang takes up then and works until 6 o'clock the next morning.

Lieut. A. C. Kefauver has charge of the second platoon. Two sergeants, E. M. Warfield and P. B. Grisso, are next in command. With these men are 16 tried and true privates, graduates all of first-aid courses.

Inception in 1925.

Now, the Fire Rescue Squad is the expansion of an idea originally conceived for the Fire Department alone. That is, it was brought into being on January 20, 1925, as an auxiliary of the Fire Department, to help rescue people overcome by smoke and flames, water, or what not, around fires, but, somehow or other, the civilians got wind of the idea and now the Fire Rescue Squad plays in anybody's back yard.

If a man, for instance, coming home late at night with a jag on—from having three too many of 3.2 brew—should he find homself in diffisulties, having trouble locating the keyhole, or anything like that, chances are he might send for the Fire Rescue Squad, if he happened to think of it. Such things have happened.

The Fire Rescue Squad has done a little bit of everything. Until now it seems there is nothing on the face of God's green earth the Fire Rescue Squad can not rescue, if it can get there in time.

Orders of the department are that the Rescue Squad must not go out until the commanding officer is assured that an emergency exists; but you can not always determine an emergency over the telephone.

"For why?"

When the Rescue Squad gets there they find a bedridden woman who wants an ambulance ride to a hospital—and, having nothing else to do at the moment, the Rescue Squad takes the lady for a ride.

Somebody, somewhere, found out that when all other means fail, there is always action coming from the Fire Rescue Squad. So the squad is kept on the qui vive—from Q street to V.

In rising to its present state of perfection—which is almost perfection itself—the Fire Rescue Squad has assembled an equipment that is quite remarkable. The human mind can hardly think of anything the squad can not do.

What a Wagon!

There are two pieces of equipment in the squad's possession—that is, two conveyances; an ambulance and a wagon. The ambulance is just an ambulance painted red, but a very beautiful and flashy red. The wagon? There is a wagon. It looks like some sort of a fire apparatus—like a high-powered fire-fighting apparatus; but that is merely because of its color. What this wagon really is is this: A traveling tool shop—a tool shop on wheels. Not only a tool shop, but a moving hospital. There is on that wagon, and in that wagon about every conceivable piece of appliance and remedy that might save a human life.

In a book over at headquarters they have five pages devoted to the contents of the Fire Rescue Squad wagon.

If a horse fell down a sewer, for instance, the boys on the Rescue Squad would get out a block and tackle and lift the horse back to the streets.

If a man in a lunchroom wedged a toothpick between his molars the boys would have the necessary dental instruments to tend to that job.

If it came necessary to break a Yale lock, they have a Yale lock breaker. They carry acetylene torches to melt down steel doors. They can drill holes in the side of a safe. They can work even under water, carrying with them equipment for this purpose.

Designed by Fern.

The wagon was designed by Superintendent of Machinery O. E. Fern—and to the end of time good firefighters everywhere will be laying wreaths of roses to the memory of Fern. He did not overlook one single bet.

If the Rescue Squad wants to stop a flow of gas, they have with them corks of every size and description. They can turn water off, repair sprinkler systems, revive gas victims with their pulmotors, scale six-story buildings in 50 seconds by use of the specially designed ladders they carry; pick locks, wade through deadly gases, having their own gas masks, and do any number of things.

And they are usually doing them, for the records, completed for the fiscal year just ended, show that the Fire Rescue Squad went out on 2,720 calls from July 1, 1932, to July 1, 1933. Fast as they got back from one call they started on another.

What those calls were is the story of romance and adventure that makes all members of the Fire Department long for a chance to get on the Rescue Squad. The boys go places and see things—and some of the sights are funny, and some of the sights are sad; but whatever they are they are usually interesting, for the Fire Rescue Squad deals primarily with human nature.

To give an idea of the diversity of the work these men do, here is a summary. In the year finished they went to 160 automobile accidents, 34 gas leaks and loose electric refrigeration, 6 explosions, 10 sprinkler systems awry, 1,046 first-aid cases, 129 gas cases, 59 heart attacks, 37 drownings and near-drownings, 114 poison cases of all kinds, 93 epilepsy cases, 6 hangings, 1,257 injuries—and on top of that they transported 1,511 persons to hospitals.

As the records show it, the ambulance responded to 1,969 local calls—which means calls from the outside; not actual Fire Department work. The wagon alone went to 159 calls, and both pieces together saw service on 239 trips. Now that is a record worth preserving. In their heaviest month the boys responded to 306 calls, which is one of the reasons the lieutenant missed his lunch.

Fire Chief Watson, who has an admiration in his heart for all these men, tells why they are selected for this particular duty. He says:

"They are chosen because they are the highest type of men, mentally, morally, and physically, in the department. They go to the Red Cross, take special courses and graduate with honors. They must be men of strength and courage—and they are, of necessity, men of high human understanding."

5-Alarm Blaze At White House Christmas Eve

The past six years have seen some big fires in the District of Columbia, in which hundreds of pieces of apparatus and thousands of firemen have engaged in battling the flames.

In 1928 a five-alarm fire in Woolworth's 5-and-10-cent store, 923-925 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, was one of the big blazes of the year, while on April 19 another five-alarm fire occurred at Johnson & Wimsatt's lumber yard, Twelfth and Water streets southwest.

A fire long remembered by Washingtonians was that on January 12, 1929, when the store of Dulin & Martin, on F street, between Twelfth and Thirtenth, was ruined by a six-alarm blaze. That same year there was much excitement, although not so much fire damage, when four alarms and a special were turned in as the White House executive offices caught fire. This occurred on Christmas Eve.

A five-alarm blaze, with two special alarms later, happened on July 29, 1930, at the Hub Furniture Co.'s warehouse at 21-23 M street northeast. On August 30, that year, the Federal Trade Commission offices burned, a five-hour fight, which resulted in six alarms and a special. Twenty-eight firemen were overcome with smoke fighting this fire.

The year 1931 saw four alarms and a special for a blaze at the Dairy Supply factory and auto body factory at 430 Delaware avenue and 52 Canal street. Another five-alarm fire occurred on April 22 at 428 Ninth street northwest.

The two biggest fires this year, so far, were a blaze in the Interstate Commerce Commission Building, now under construction, and a three-fire alarm affair at McMahon Hall, Catholic University. The first occurred on January 6 and the second on January 7.

Neighbor Fire Groups Lauded

Watson Says Volunteer Departments Give Valuable Aid.

Volunteer firemen are the backbone of fire fighting in the United States, according to George S. Watson, chief enginer of the District Fire Department.

"Nowhere," said Watson, "do you find a finer spirit, more willing men, or a band of finer fellowship than among these organizations."

Chief Watson pointed how the volunteer companies in Maryland and nearby Virginia are his second line of defense, and actually mean thousands of dollars to the value of the District Fire Department.

When a big fire occurs in Washington, these volunteer companies rush into the city and automatically station themselves at the houses of fire companies which have been called out after the third, fourth or fifth alarm.

Nowhere in America is a system better organized than in Washington and its nearby volunteer companies. Chief Watson pointed out that he never has to ask for aid. The volunteer organizations come to Washington, no matter what the hour, nor how bad the fire. They gladly risk their lives at any task.

Brave Rescue By Outstanding Fire Hero Told

Wareen Dues, 23, Flint, Mich., was selected as the greatest outstanding hero of a fire, and was brought to Washington as the special guest of honor.

When he was 22, Dues rescued seven children from a burning home, and was injured so badly that doctors thought he would die. He recovered, however, and has now been showered with honors.

The rescue came about in the folling manner. He was helping a young girl next door to his home mind seven children from three different families while their parents were away. An oil stove in the house exploded and sent out a flaming spray of burning fuel, igniting the garments of the infants.

Dues first recued the older girl. Then he went back into the house. Here he took two of the children under his arms, and made his way to safety. Again he plunged into the structure, which by now was all but ready to fall. Courageously he rescued two more of the hysterical children.

Injured seriously, he went back into the flaming mass. He removed the last two children. Then he fell exhausted outside. He was burned horribly, but remained conscious, inquiring if all of the children were safe.

One of the little girls suffered third degree burns, as did Dues. She died two days later, but Dues, after a brave fight for life in the Flint Hospital, recovered.

The fire chief of the Michigan city nominated Dues above all members of his department for the great honor. He was brought to Washington by one of the crack trains of the Pennsylvania Railway, and had every courtesy while he was aboard.

Sunday afternoon, he was presented with a beautiful gold medal for his heroic services.

75,000 Kept in City By Parade Aids Trade

Civic leaders have estimated that the annual National Firemen's Labor Day parade keeps at least 75,000 Washingtonians from leaving the city on Labor Day.

Were it not for the parade, many residents would rush off for the shore, the lakes, the mountains, or other resorts for one last fling at a vacation before the official beginning of fall. This means many thousands of dollars for Washington merchants.

Leading Capital Stores Enter Parade Floats

Many of Washington's leading merchants have entered floats in the commercial division of the National Fireman's Labor Day parade. You will see them as they pass the reviewing stands.

Some of the floats cost $300.

Fire Parade Plans Aided by Brown

Without the cooperation of Maj. Ernest Brown, superintendent of Washington Police, the National Firemen's Labor Day parade could not be held.

Each year the Police Department has generously offered its aid, and in addition has put many splendid floats in the pageant, thereby making it more colorful and more symbolical of the ideals of civic life in the National Capital.

Maj. Brown early in the history of this year's parade issued orders for his men to help the firefighters with their celebration and then he personally assured Fire Chief George S. Watson that he would give his aid.

Gude Gave Flowers For Wreath Ceremony

Wreaths firemen put on the tombs of George Washington and the Unknown Soldier, were donated by Granville Gude, president of Gude Brothers, florists.

The wreath laying ceremonies officially began the activities of the National Firemen's Labor Day celebration. A delegation headed by Fire Chief George S. Watson, Maj. Ernest Brown, of the Metropolitan Police Department, and Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, plus many battalion chiefs of the Fire Department, and officers of the National Firemen's Association participated.

Ladies of Auxiliary Lauded by Firemen

Much of the success of every National Firemen's Labor Day parade goes to the Ladies Auxiliary of the District Fire Department.

Each year the ladies have graciously given their services in preparing the lunches for the visiting firefighters. Sometimes they have worked 12 hours at a stretch without rest in distributing the food.

Association Offers Prize.

The city Firefighters' Association, of which Private J. M. Jamieson is president, donated one of the most beautiful of all the trophies for this year's parade.

Firemen Stay on the Job.

Washington firemen gave their off-duty time to work on the National Firemen's Labor Day parade. Not a department member spent working hours on the parade feature until the last day, when one was excused from duty.

Telephone Calls Attest Fire Parade Interest

Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, marshal of today's firemen's parade estimates he has received more than 10,000 telephone calls during the last week. Persons called him from as early as 6 a. m., and as late as midnight about phases of the fete.

To assure yourself of a good view of the National Firemen's parade and the bicycle and roller skating sweepstakes, a ticket to the grand stands should be purchased.

They are on sale this year at many downtown locations, as well as at the stands. Tickets may also be purchased at the cashier's counter at the Washington Post.

Cycle and Roller Skate Races Precede Parade

Of great interest to firemen attending the Labor Day parade this year, as well as Washingtonians and visitors, are the bicycle and roller skating sweepstakes along Pennsylvania avenue.

This will take place at 10:30 a. m., just before the big parade. All kinds of events are planned, along with much comedy, which should add considerably to the interest of the day.

Memorial

Imposing Edifice Here Would Honor Courage of Dead Firemen.

Some time in the near future, firemen hope to construct in Washington a permanent memorial to firefighters who have given their lives in line of duty.

An edifice somewhat like the Lincoln Memorial, with 48 columns, representing the various States of the Union, is the present plan. In this building will be housed some of the oldest pieces of fire equipment in the country. In fact, the firemen plan to gather together here all of the ancient equipment possible.

Chief George S. Watson of the District Fire Department has long been in favor of this memorial and is one of the moving figures toward accomplishing its end.

Early History Of City Shows Many Big Fires

Washington's fire department has always ranked high up among the efficient departments of the country.

But in the old days, before motor apparatus and large numbers of firemen in each station, big fires were hardly the exception. It was simply impossible, with the equipment at hand, to control fires which had a good start before the alarm was received.

Investigation into the history of the Capital reveals that from 1878 to 1901, the city was ravaged each year by several disastrous fires of varying proportions, with a number of firemen killed and injured in the course of their duties.

Old-timers around the city will recall some of the fires listed hereafter, while to the younger generation this story may result in the usual expression "I wish I had been there" for the thrill of following the firemen, whether on a steamer drawn by galloping horses or on a speeding ladder truck of 1933 vintage is still the same.

Park Building Burns.

The following year on May 23 the livery stables of Burgdorf & Bro. burned to the ground, while on November 6 the main building at Schuetzen Park on Brightwood road was destroyed by fire. Stewart Castle on Dupont Circle was damaged to the extent of $30,000 on December 30 of that year.

Early in the year of 1880, on January 21 to be exact, another big fire in Georgetown attracted the residents. It was the burning of Herr & Cissel's flour mills at Potomac and Grace streets. Then on July 22 the livery stable of James Kelleher burned. It was from this stable that John Wilkes Booth rented the horse on which he escaped after the assassination of President Lincoln.

Those who rushed to Heurich's Brewery only a few weeks ago to see firemen fight a blaze in that plant, will be interested in knowing that on May 1, 1881, the brewery was badly damaged by fire.

The Chronicle Building, first home of The Washington Post, was destroyed in a fire on May 18, 1882, while on June 8, the same year the warehouse of W. H. Tenney & Sons, in Georgetown, was gutted by fire.

Fire waits not for the completion of man's efforts and on August 11, 1884, a warehouse being erected for W. B. Moses at Eleventh and F streets northwest, was burned down.

1885 An Unlucky Year.

The year 1885 was an unlucky one for buildings of great importance to the community. First of all, on January 29 the Evening Star Building at Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue was destroyed. A month later, on February 27, the National Theater burned to the ground, while on March 12 a blaze of disastrous proportions visited St. Dominic's Church at Sixth and E streets southwest. And the same year, on July 16, the home of The Washington Post at Tenth and D streets northwest, was ruined by fire.

On January 5, 1886, the famous old excursion steamer Armenia was burned while at the dock in Alexandria. The famous grocery of Barbour & Hamilton burned on July 27 and on December 5 Lincoln Hall, noted theater building at Ninth and D streets northwest, burned.

First of the big fires of 1887 was that at the residence of Alexander Graham Bell, Rhode Island avenue at Scott circle, with a $30,000 loss, including a fine library. William M. Galt's feed warehouse at First and D streets northwest burned on June 28.

The Metropolitan Club was damaged to the extent of $15,000 by a fire on April 30, 1888.

Fire swept through the Swedenborgian Church on North Capitol street, betwen B and C streets, on February 9, 1889, while on August 2 of that year fire damaged Woodword & Lothrop's store, Eleventh and F streets.

Tragedy at Tracy Home.

Official Washington was shocked on February 3, 1890, when Mrs. Benjamin F. Tracy, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and Miss Mary Tracy were burned to death in their home at 1634 I street northwest. The Secretary narrowly escaped the same fate. The carriage factory of William Walter at Fourteenth and D streets northwest, burned on July 25 that year, while on December 7 Christian Ruppert's store suffered a $200,000 loss by fire.

The James G. Blaine residence at Twentieth and P streets northwest was damaged to the extent of $15,000 by fire on January 1, 1891. It was then occupied by Levi Z. Leiter.

Fire destroyed the chapel of the Church of the Covenant on January 16, 1892. On March 22 that year 10,000 volumes of documents worth $15,000 were burned in a fire in the folding room of the Capitol. Willard Hall, Fourteenth and F streets northwest, burned on October 27.

Four firemen were injured seriously when Francis Miller's paint store at 305 Ninth street northwest, burned January 21, 1893. Jackson City, famed gambling place on the south end of Long Bridge, burned November 30, 1893. On December 23, same year, the two top floors of the Hamilton Hotel burned, while on December 29 a blaze of great proportions destroyed a large part of Takoma Park.

The year 1894 was a bad one for the Fire Department. Early in the year, on February 25, the Masonic Temple, Ninth and F streets, was damaged $45,000 by fire. On June 13 the Washington Abattoir Co., at Benning, burned with a loss of $125,000. The Eckington Hotel burned on June 19, and on July 25 the George W. Knox warehouse and stables were consumed. Three firemen were killed, five injured and 135 horses burned to death. The loss was $700,000. Seven persons were killed on September 17 in a fire at the mattress factory of Stumph & Bro., at 631 Massachusetts avenue. Then on October 8 the Bethesda Park Hotel and theater burned.

Car Stables Destroyed.

Car stables of the Brightwood Street Railway Co., at Brightwood avenue and Albemarle street, burned on January 24, 1895. The excursion boat Lady of the Lake burned at its Seventh street wharf on February 15, and on July 24 the Y. M. C. A., at Fourteenth street and New York avenue, burned with a loss of $35,000.

Three firemen were killed and a fourth fatally injured when fire destroyed 22 buildings in the block bounded by B street, Louisiana avenue, Ninth and Tenth streets, on May 18, 1896.

Washington's first "$1,000,000 fire" occurred on September 29, 1897, when the power house of the Capital Traction Co., located on the present site of the District Building, was destroyed.

In 1898, September 19, the store of Robinson & Cherry, famous merchants, was destroyed with a $220,000 loss. Another fire in the Capitol, on November 6, destroyed the office of the marshal of the Supreme Court, causing $20,000 damage. The Eckington and Soldiers' Home car shed at Fourth and T streets northeast, burned on December 3 with a $65,000 loss, while on December 29 four firemen were injured fighting a $65,000 blaze at the store of Barber & Ross, Eleventh and G streets.

Burning of the Pennsylvania Railroad shed at Rosslyn, Va., was an event of 1899, the fire occurring on February 5. Then on May 26 the store of Cherry & Moran, successors to Robinson & Cherry, wiped out by fire the previous year, was burned. It was located at 811 Market place.

No big fires are listed for 1900, but in 1901, on January 18, the Pope Manufacturing Co., at 817 Fourteenth street, burned with $150,000 loss. Then on March 3 the George W. Knox warehouse at D street and Virginia avenue southwest was destroyed with $115,000 loss.

Plant of Post Victim of Blaze On July 16, '85

Newspaper Office Burned as Reporter Narrowly Escapes Death.

Thousands of Washingtonians gathered at Tenth and D streets northwest on the night of July 16, 1885, when the plant of The Washington Post was destroyed by fire.

The blaze started in the boiler room of the United States Electric Light Co., in the rear of the Post building. It soon ate its way through a partition into the plant of the Post. Discovered about 8 o'clock in the evening, by 9:30 the Post building was a mass of fire with flames shooting through the roof of the building.

Nearby property threatened during the course of the fire including the Wash Williams auction and storage rooms; old Emergency Hospital; the office of the Sunday Herald and Hatchet and the Washington Gas Light company.

Michigan Vigilantes Have Holdup Drills

Residents Trained Monthly in Village to Cope With Criminals.

Plainwell, Mich. (U.P.).—A vigilante organization, the members of which are husky, well-armed citizens, is being trained in this village to cope with criminals in Allegan County.

Eleven specially picked residents meet at the village hall one night a month to study the county map, familiarize themselves with ideal situations for crimes, practice the use of firearms, and enact mock holdups.

The Plainwell vigilante group differs from others of the familiar Michigan system of vigilantes in many counties, as the Plainwell men are equipped to meet any criminal emergency, while most of the vigilante groups are on call for bank hold-ups only.

At their business meetings the vigilantes map out hold-ups and other major crimes and then plan their method of search. They select two or three men to stage the hold-up and plan a getaway and the rest of the organization then sets up the machinery of the mock search. They mark on the county map the spots where hold-ups would be likely to occur and in each different plan have outlined their method of search in such a manner that virtually every entrance and exit in the county is guarded.

Ohio ranks third among the States in the number of airports and landing fields.

Tuna Fish and Italian Fisherman Die in Duel

Nizza di Sicilia, Italy (U.P.).—A great tuna fish and Salvatore Santisi, 54, had a tragic battle, which ended in a draw; both antagonists died.

Santisi was out in deep waters with his son and two sailors striking for tuna with a harpoon, from a sailboat. Steady of eye and arm, he spiked a great fish right between the fore fins as he had done countless times before.

This time, however, Santisi forgot to roll his rope before striking and it encircled his foot, only to pull him overboard when the fish darted for the sea bed.

An hour later his companions recovered his body as it came to the surface. On the other extremity of the rope was the great tuna, dead.

Old Ring Dug Up.

"Puppy" Weighs 205 Pounds.

Bend, Oreg. (U.P.).—Bill Baer wanted a puppy, so he sent back to Indiana and had a pedigreed animal sent to him by express. A few days later the express company notified him his dog had arrived. Bill went down to claim the puppy and was informed the express bill on it was $31.98. His "puppy," a St. Bernard, weighed 205 pounds.

Beer Not an Intoxicant.

San Antonio, Tex. (U.P.).—Beer sales in San Antonio are going forward despite the rigid state law against sale of intoxicants. District Judge W. W. McCrory held that in view of the national declaration that 3.2 beer is not intoxicating, sales can not be enjoined unless there is actual proof that it intoxicates.

Must Have Bicycle Lights.

Cleburne, Tex. (U.P.).—To meet the traffic problems here caused by the fever for bicycling, Mayor J. S. Hoffman has issued orders that all bicycles must have lights, front and rear, at night.

'Post March' Used By Parade Bands

"The Washington Post March," played by so many bands during parades down historic Pennsylvania avenue, and which will be featured by most of the musical organizations in today's firemen's parade, was written by John Philip Sousa, famed conductor of the Marine Band.

It was at the request of the owners of The Washington Post that Sousa composed this march. The number was first to be played at the finals of a contest among school children writing essays on patriotic subjects.

The march was an instantaneous hit and has been played in almost every civilized country. The number was dedicated to Frank Hatton and Beriah Wilkins, then owners of The Washington Post.

New Oil Testing Device Reduces Fire Dangers

East Pittsburgh (U.P.).—Danger of fire during high-temperature oil tests may be reduced by use of a testing oven developed here by J. G. Ford, research engineer of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.

The oven, made of solid aluminum, with holes drilled for insertion of test tubes, is designed to maintain oil samples at a required 392 degrees Fahrenheit during the Sligh oxidation tests.

Previously the test tubes were placed in a bath of hot castor or mineral oil, which invariably ignited if one of the tubes exploded, as sometimes occurred.

Dog Member of C. C. C. At Rainbow Lakes

He is the mascot of the Rainbow Lakes camp of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

He manages to keep busy about the camp all day, his name is included in every roll call, and he sleeps in a different bed every night.

Recently he has been somewhat "high-hat" and has slept only in officers' tents.

Firemen attending the National Firemen's Labor Day parade are invited by Bill Levy, of the Airport Swimming Pool, to avail themselves of a free swim after the parade.

The Airport Pool is located in Virginia, just beyond the end of the Fourteenth street bridge. They should appear in uniform, before 3 p. m., Labor Day. Firemen were enthusiastic in their praise of Mr. Levy's offer.

Replica of First Fire Engine to Be in Parade

No. 1 Engine Company will have a replica of the Nation's first fire engine on its float in the Labor Day parade. It will be a working reproduction, able to squirt water with the best of them. J. F. Duhamel furnished the plans. Working on the engine, left to right, are J. C. Weaver, Capt. S. M. Gould, J. N. Kayser and A. C. Dansereau.

Both Radio Systems Greatly Helped Parade

Credit should be given America's two great radio systems—the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System, for their generous aid in helping with the National Firemen's Labor Day parade.

Both chains, through their public relation experts, Vincent Callahan and Ted Church, gave the firefighters many minutes over the air, and thereby helped promote the big celebration. Private Harry Bell, of the District Fire Department, chairman of the radio committee, was instrumental in securing programs, time and broadcasts.

Capital Now Recognized U. S. Fire Headquarters

Firemen throughout the Nation recognize Washington and its nearby cities as the real fire headquarters of America. Nowhere in the country is a better organization of volunteers found than in the cities and towns around the National Capital. This is known as the "hot bed" of volunteer fire fighters.

Apparatus Built in 1741 Believed Oldest in U. S.

"Rescue," the old pumper brought to Washington by the Greencastle Fire Department, is believed to be the oldest piece of fire apparatus in America. It was built in 1741, and purchased second hand from the city of Baltimore by the Pennsylvania company in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Modern Woodmen Join In Parade of Firemen

This organization, holding its Eastern zone encampment, will appear in uniform and be accompanied by several bands and appropriate floats.

Service Bands in Line.

Joining in making the firemen's parade the great success it has always been, the three great bands of the Nation's Capital will all march today. The Army, Navy and Marine musical organizations will head divisions of the parade and give the assembled thousands plenty of thrills as they swing down the Avenue.

Firemen's Organizer.

Hero Guest at Theater.

Loew's Fox Theater reserved the Presidential box for Warren Dues, selected as "the greatest living fire hero" at its show on Sunday night as its share in entertaining the Flint, Mich., hero.

3 Firemen's Friends Give Parade Benefits

Joe Turner, "daddy" of the wrestling game in The Capital and former world's champion, sponsored a huge wrestling match for the firemen's benefit. Jimmy Lake, one of America's most beloved showmen, and manager of the Gayety Theater, gave a midnight show, and Charley Cornell, boxing promoter, arranged the bout between Joe Knight and Bobby Godwin.

Float Fee Aids Fund.

In order to aid the parade fund of the National Firemen's Association, it was decided to have a nominal fee of $15 for commercial floats in the parade. Merchants were anxious to do their part toward helping finance the big event and the long list of commercial floats indicates the popularity of the idea.

Trophy Chairman

Civic Leaders Aid In Parade Plans

The citizens' committee which aided in the preparations for the firemen's parade, and which was headed by Odell S. Smith, was composed of the following members:

Rudolph Jose, Harry F. Allmond, Maj. Edwin B. Hesse, Edward R. Pierce, Maj. E. W. Brown, Robert J. Cottrell, Capt. Charles Demonet, Maj. D. J. Donovan and Mrs. John Allan Dougherty.

Bargagni Says Original March Cost Only $20

"Shoe String" Event Grows Into Real Spectacle in Eleven Years.

Eleven years ago Sergt. A. J. Bargagni conceived the idea of the National Firemen's Labor Day parade.

Since that time, a lot of water has poured over the dam, and a lot of firemen have paraded down Pennsylvania avenue. But the idea is still the same—a great celebration for fire fighters from all parts of the country.

First Parade Cost $20.

The first year, Sergt. Bargaghi ran the parade on the proverbial "shoe string." It cost about $20. This year it is more than a $5,000 undertaking.

From year to year the parade has grown larger. More firemen have taken part, more States have been represented and more recognition has been given fire departments. Now it is a real national event that attracts as many as 250,000 spectators.

This year the parade committee is distinguished by six of the most prominent men of the National Government. Serving as honorary chairman are: Postmaster General Farley, Secretary of War Dern, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Roper, Secretary of the Treasury Woodin, and Attorney General Cummings.

Notables to See Parade.

In the reviewing stands this year will be representatives from 17 foreign countries. Together with the governmental dignitaries and out-of-State officials, this will comprise the most auspicious group of reviewers ever to watch the parade.

Throughout the history of the parade, it has always had the support and sanction of George S. Watson, beloved fire chief of the District of Columbia, and one of the best-known fire officials in America.

Year in and year out, he has borne with the department its problems of promoting and carrying forward the National Firemen's Labor Day parade, and without his cooperation, civic leaders realize it could not be held.

Tourist in Switzerland Buys Musical Cowbells

Hiawatha, Kans. (U.P.).—Mat Eylar, who divides his time between running a big stock farm near here and traveling in Europe as representative for a typewriter company, believes cowbells should be pleasing to the ear as well as performing a practical purpose.

Fire Fighters From Omaha Will Parade

Roland Peterson Comes Longest Distance for Fete.

Volunteer fire companies to march in the Labor Day parade reached Washington yesterday from all points of the compass. On arriving members registered at No. 1 Engine House and then went sightseeing.

Although there was no float representing Omaha, Nebr., Roland Peterson made the trip by train to participate in the parade. Peterson, a former private, was retired from the Omaha Fire Department when he was injured in action during the winter of 1932. He is 29 years old.

Graham, N. C., is represented with a float and 29 men. With them is Dr. William S. Long, vice president of the North Carolina Firemen's Association, a perennial participant in the Labor Day parades. Other arrivals were companies from Bedford Hills, N. Y.; Merrick, Long Island; West Seneca, N. Y.; Greencastle, Pa.; Waynesboro, Pa.; Wildwood, N. J.; Rehoboth Beach, Del., and Harrisonburg, Va.

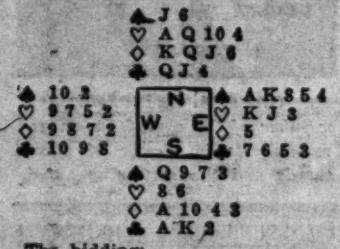
A Brilliant Discard.

End-play situations are the most common of the so-called "advanced" plays. Coups are comparatively rare and squeezes do not come up as often as one would be led to believe; end-plays, however, and particularly forced leads, come up with great frequency and a player should always be on the lookout for an opportunity to execute one of them. Most players appreciate the principle and are ready to take advantage of it, but it is a rare thing to find someone who appreciates the proper defense against these plays.

In the following hand North and South reached a rather weird contract of four notrump which, however, can be made if the Declarer reads the opposing cards properly. Actually, he was defeated on account of a brilliant discard on the part of the East player.

East, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1♠	Dbl.	Pass	3♡
Pass	3NT	Pass	4NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Admittedly, the bidding was very peculiar. South's Double was not sound on account of his lack of hearts. In view of this Double I do not think that North can be especially criticized for his raise to four notrump. He apparently was convinced that East had opened the bidding with some sort of psychic—particularly, as he was not vulnerable. South, of course, was very glad to pass this bid.

West opened the Ten of spades—the higest card of his partner's suit—and when Dummy played low, East won the trick with the King. It was apparent to him that South must hold two spade stoppers and must also hold the Ace of diamonds and the Ace-King of clubs. If this were the case he was bound to be caught in an end-play as all that Declarer had to do was to throw him in wtih a spade at the end. After cashing the King of spades, therefore, East laid down the 7 of clubs, deliberately concealing his four-card suit. Declarer won this trick in his own hand with the Ace and immediately tried the heart finesse of the Queen. This was a very poor play as the King was practically marked in the East hand on the bidding. However, South probably felt that he could reserve his other play until later.

East now returned the 6 of clubs and this was won in the Dummy. The next play was the Knave of spades and East held off. Now the Declarer ran 4 diamond tricks and took his last club trick. East followed on the first diamond and on the second one discarded a low heart, deliberately blanking his Knave. He then threw two low spades. At this point all the Declarer had to do was lead a heart and go up with the Ace, but the club falsecards had deceived him—in fact, he counted on East's hand for having left 1 spade and 2 hearts. He, therefore, led a low spade, expecting the heart return to be forthcoming, and was bitterly disappointed when East cashed the thirteenth club for the setting trick.

Had East played naturally and held on to his hearts as long as possible, it would have been perfectly obvious to the Declarer that the Knave had finally been blanked. By concealing his club suit and discarding the heart immediately East made it almost impossible for South to obtain a correct reading.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South, dealer.

The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

Firemen Carry Out Memorial Program

This marks the first year that firemen have carried out a three-day program in connection with the National Firemen's Labor Day parade.

The celebration began this year with the placing of a wreath on George Washington's tomb to honor the memory of the first volunteer firemen, and the same proceedure at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. These took place on Saturday.

Sunday afternoon the firefighters joined hands in an impressive memorial to the firemen who have lost their lives in line of duty. Sunday night the firefighters held their second annual National Firemen's Association meeting at the National Press Club.

Dr. McDonald To Direct Aid At Fire Parade

The task of administering first aid among the thousands who will watch the firemen's Labor Day parade today will be handled by Acting Coroner A. Magruder McDonald and his highly organized Ambulance and First Aid Corps.

Dr. McDonald has directed this important feature of the annual parade for several years, assisted by Vincent Sardo, local undertaker.

He has organized a group of more than 25 ambulances and about 100 nurses and doctors this year. Every hospital and a number of undertaking establishments have donated ambulances.

Aid Stations at Corners.

Stationary first aid stations will be placed at each corner on Pennsylvania avenue along the route of the parade, according to Dr. McDonald.

The ambulances will keep a constant patrol of the avenue from 8 a. m. till the close of the day's events.

One of the duties of the corps will be to care for lost children and find their parents.

More than 200 persons were given first aid treatment during the parade last year. It is expected, with a larger crowd today, Dr. McDonald and his assistants will be kept busy.

Tribute From Bargagni.

Serpt. A. J. Bargagni, parade marshal, yesterday expressed the appreciation of those in charge of the parade for Dr. McDonald's work in organizing the first aid corps.

"He has devoted his time unstintedly for a month to perfecting plans for the first aid work. Much of the success of the parade will certainly be due to his efforts," Bargagni said.

Dr. McDonald will personally direct the first aid work from one of the ambulances, in which he will cruise up and down the avenue.

Firemen Grateful For Merchants' Aid

Parade Audience Disinguished.

Washingon's firemen's parade probably draws a more distinguished audience than any similar event held anywhere in the United States. Members of the Diplomatic Corps, officials high in Government circles and persons of prominence in nearby States are all drawn to Pennsylvania avenue for the spectacle.

Big Help

DR. A. MAGRUDER MACDONALD, acting coroner, is chairman of the emergency committee of this year's National Firemen's Labor Day parade. Through his direction and personal assistance, ambulances, physicians and nurses were secured for the parade to administer aid to any who might fall by the wayside along the line of march.

A. J. Bargagni Honored By 48 Fire Companies

Sergt. A. J. Bargagni, parade marshal, is an honorary member of 48 volunteer fire companies in various parts of the country. He is probably one of the best known firefighters in the country, through his work in connection with 11 parades.

Washington Was First Volunteer Fireman

Few firemen know, according to a contemporary history on firefighting, that George Washington was the first volunteer fireman. He was a member of the old Friendship Company, Alexandria.

Outstanding Fire Hero Hamilton Hotel Guest

Merchants Present Trophies.

Many of the trophies presented to winners of the various contests held in connection with today's parade were contributed by local merchants who are always anxious to aid in the big event.

Mrs. Randall Gives Handsome Trophy

Mrs. C. B. Randall, Chevy Chase, this year contributed one of the most beautiful trophies ever seen in a firemen's parade.

She has long been identified with the Chevy Chase Department and every year has helped Sergt. A. J. Bargagni and his committee with the National Firemen's Labor Day parade.

Few firemen's events are held throughout nearby Maryland which Mrs. Randall does not support. Her brother is one of the officers of the Chevy Chase company.

Fire Hero, Who Saved 7, Weighs 112 Pounds

Warren Dues, who rescued seven children from a burning house in Flint, Mich., and now is here to be decorated as the greatest living fire hero, weighs only 112 pounds. He carried the children to safety through burning and falling timbers.

Fete to Be Broadcast Over National Hookup
